This year has brought major challenges to Northern Colorado's energy industry, as companies have raced to cut costs in the face of a dramatic drop in oil prices. Despite the financial pressures, the industry is pressing forward, finding ways to produce at much lower price points and continuing to invest in preparation for the long-term demand for oil and natural gas.

This Energy Book will help you stay abreast of the key developments in this vital arena. In these pages you'll find directories and rankings of all the major players in the business as well as coverage of the issues that are shaping the industry this year.

As always, we welcome your feedback.

We also want to thank our researcher, Kiley Gant, for the terrific job she has done to collect the data for the Energy Book. Kiley would also welcome any feedback you may have on the lists or directory. Contact her via e-mail at kgant@bizwestmedia.com to suggest a new company, to find out how to submit an update or to recommend a new list for us to research in the coming year.

A big thank-you also is due to our sponsor, Noble Energy.

Xcel Energy's new transmission project part of a national push

Rebuilding the aging power grid suddenly popular again

By Steve Lynn
news@bizwestmedia.com

BRUSH – Xcel Energy Inc.'s (NYSE: XEL) $178 million transmission line from Brush to Castle Pines to bring wind power from Northern Colorado to the Denver Metropolitan area is part of a nationwide push by utilities to upgrade electricity transmission lines.

The 125-mile line will bring electricity generated by windfarms in northeast Colorado, including wind farms operated by Chicago-based Invenergy Wind LLC near Peetz, 130 miles northeast of Fort Collins. The Colorado Public Utilities Commission approved the final leg of the project from Aurora to Castle Pines in April.

Construction on the 345-kilovolt Pawnee-Daniels Park Transmission Project, is underway and will go into service in 2022, according to Xcel. The transmission line will connect with the Pawnee electrical substation near Brush to a new electrical substation known as Daniels Park near Castle Pines. It also will transmit electricity generated by natural-gas power plants.

The new project comes as U.S. investor-owned electric companies invested a record $16.9 billion in transmission infrastructure in 2013. The investment rose 14.2 percent compared to investment in 2012, according to a report by the Edison Electric Institute. Utilities invested in the upgrades to improve reliability and to support the oil and gas industry in remote areas with limited electric service.

In the past decade, investor-owned utilities have committed $92.9 billion to transmission projects, with $31.7 billion of that total in the past two years. Between 2014 and 2017, investor-owned utilities will spend $78 billion, according to the report.

Xcel's isn't the only transmission project planned for the state. Another 725-mile proposed transmission line developed by the Western Area Power Administration will run from Sinclair, Wyo., and south through northwest Colorado and winding through Utah to a hub near Las Vegas.

The project is being developed and has yet to receive key regulatory approvals, but it will likely be funded by the power administration's increased borrowing authority for such projects. In 2009, the Department of Energy authorized the power administration to borrow $3.25 billion for transmission projects to help deliver renewable energy, said Lisa Meiman, spokeswoman for the power administration.

"If completed, the project would transmit about 3,000 megawatts of electricity per year generated primarily from renewable resources in Wyoming," she said.

The power administration has a few other projects from the borrowing program, including two completed projects in Arizona – 109 miles – and Montana – 214 miles. Another 240-mile line is being developed in Arizona and New Mexico.

Along with transmission of renewable energy, Xcel's line is meant to provide Xcel customers with additional reliability amid increased electricity demand, according to Xcel.

In 1968, Xcel built one transmission line along the route and bought enough land for two transmission lines, about 210 feet wide. However, Xcel's new transmission line will not differ much technologically from older transmission lines, Xcel spokesman Mark Stutz.

He explained that Xcel has better materials and structures for the lines as well as reductions in noise and electromagnetic field where necessary, but none of those improvements change the basic nature of the line.

In some places, construction crews will simply upgrade old infrastructure by modifying towers and other equipment. Some of the new construction will not start until 2020.

Environmentalists are encouraged that most of the project will make use of property next to existing transmissions lines.

"It will provide more capability to bring in wind energy, which is a good thing, and also to transport gas generation to back up the wind," said Ken Wilson, engineering fellow at Western Resource Advocates. "Rather than putting transmission poles in a new place, you just put a few more in the same place."

The Boulder-based conservation group supports improving the nation's transmission structure to meet growing demand for energy, along with reduction of electricity use by consumers and connecting to renewable energy.

"We consider this a key piece of a robust regional transmission strategy," Wilson said. "We advocate for transmission lines in good places especially when they have the potential to bring renewable energy into the grid."

Wilson added that the group hopes that utilities in the future consider so-called "non-wire solutions," such as encouraging use of more efficient appliances to delay future transmission line projects.

"If everyone had more efficient air conditioners and refrigerators, the need for new transmission lines would be reduced," he said. ■

While the number of crews working has decreased, the ones that remain keep production humming. “The cream of the crop crews are being used. They make fewer mistakes, are more efficient and generally can reduce the time it takes to drill a well,” said Mike Edwards, senior director of investor relations for PDC.

Energy efficient

Companies keep production high despite lower prices, fewer resources

By Doug Storum
dstorum@bizwestmedia.com

Crude oil prices were at about $60 per barrel in mid-May after having crashed from $115 a barrel last June to almost $45 in January, but still below the $65 per barrel price estimated to be the break even mark for oil producers.

While there’s been plenty of fallout in terms of reduced jobs, drilling activity and profitability, oil companies are surviving by finding ways to keep pumping at lower costs.

Colorado has lost 36 rigs exploring for oil and natural gas since October, a 48-percent decline that ranks the state as having the highest percentage rig count decrease of eight oil-producing states, according to a report from analyst firm IHS.

Rig counts also dropped in Texas, Oklahoma, North Dakota, New Mexico, Louisiana, Pennsylvania and Ohio.

IHS also reported that capital spending by oil and gas producers in Colorado had fallen 26 percent to $5.5 billion this year from $7.4 billion last year.

“In Colorado, the state’s nascent oil plays have also been stymied by the price declines,” according to the report.

At 42 percent, North Dakota had the second-highest percentage drop in its rig count, IHS reported. Texas, which accounts for nearly half of total U.S. land rigs, lost the most rigs, to 537 from 900, a 40 percent decline during the period.

Despite plummeting oil exploration this year, oil production still will increase as companies continue to extract oil from existing wells and step up drilling in the most efficient plays, IHS said.

“The negative impacts of low oil prices this year will be concentrated in the upstream activities — drilling and exploration — with downstream activity — refining, petrochemicals, etc. — holding up well and in some instances benefiting from lower oil prices,” according to the report.

The silver lining in the black cloud of low oil prices for drillers is that the suppliers of ancillary services are sharing the burden.

While its much larger counterparts have been turning in first-quarter losses and decreased revenue in recent days, Denver-based PDC Energy Inc., which bases most of its oil and gas drilling operations in Northern Colorado, reported a swing to profit and an 18 percent boost in revenue in April.

PDC Energy was able improve revenue from $122.6 million in the first quarter of last year to $144.6 million in the first quarter this year. It also turned a profit of $17.1 million, or 46 cents per diluted share for the period that ended March 31, as oil's price per barrel hovered in the $50 range.

The company said production increased 41 percent to 32,162 barrels of oil equivalent per day due primarily to the addition of a fifth drilling rig in the Wattenberg Field. In the Wattenberg, production was 29,203 barrels per day, while the company produced 2,958 barrels per day in the Utica shale play in the northeastern United States.

"Our operating teams continue to drive down capital costs, increase our drilling efficiencies and pursue several key technical projects that have the potential to further enhance our results," PDC's CEO and president Bart Brookman said in a prepared statement.

Mike Edwards, PDC's senior director of investor relations, said in a phone interview, that several factors are in play that help reduce the production-cost per well.

"With fewer wells being drilled, rig suppliers lower their rates to keep as many operating as possible," Edwards said. "Drilling companies tend to keep the newest stuff out there, resulting in less maintenance costs." Edwards said those price reductions, which he declined to quantify, help maintain relationships between oil companies and rig suppliers for the long term.

That along with using fewer crews also translates to reduced per-well production costs because the crews still working are the most experienced.

"The cream of the crop crews are being used," Edwards said. "They make fewer mistakes, are more efficient and generally can reduce the time it takes to drill a well," Edwards explained. Before oil prices dropped, Edwards said PDC was paying about $4.3 million per well. "Now, we're paying about $3.4 million per well. The number of drilling days per well have come down," he said, translating to about a 10 percent savings on time of drilling, which makes up about one-third of the total well drilling cost.

William E. Scaff, co-CEO of Synergy Resources Corp. in Platteville is also charging forward despite the price slump.

"Our growth in proved reserves is a result of the success of our operated horizontal drilling program, the performance of the horizontal wells in the Wattenberg Field, and proved reserves added as a result of our acquisition we completed in December," he said during a recent earnings conference call. "Following our quarter ended February 28, 2015 we have continued drilling our 11 well Cannon pad and began hydraulic fracturing and other completion operations on our inventory of 29 wells in progress. Our plans call for bringing all 40 of these wells into production by this August." Synergy's core area of operations is in the Denver-Julesburg Basin, which encompasses Colorado, Wyoming, Kansas, and Nebraska. The Wattenberg field in the D-J Basin ranks as one of the most productive fields in the U.S. Edwards pointed out that companies drilling in the Wattenberg can be confident of a consistent yield.

"It's predictable rock," he said, adding that production from one well to the next doesn't fluctuate a lot, which is not the case in other drilling areas. ■

Oil company debt loads on the rise

Local governments, economists worry about the impact

By Steve Lynn
news@bizwestmedia.com

Oil and natural-gas company Anadarko Petroleum Corp. (NYSE: APC), Weld County's No. 1 oil producer, also takes the top spot in another category: its total long-term debt.

The Woodlands, Texas,-based company, which drills oil and natural-gas wells in Weld, accumulated $15.1 billion in debt by the end of last year from $12.7 billion just four years earlier.

Debt loads at major producers in Northern Colorado, along with those nationwide, have soared during the past five years, raising concerns about a prolonged price drop for oil and the effect on local economies should some of the players cradle under the load.

Andrew Byrne, director of North American exploration and production research for Englewood-based analyst firm IHS, said that oil production has continued to increase despite a decline in the number of rigs exploring for oil and natural gas in the U.S. And while production will drop in second half of this year due to a lag effect, companies still must drill and produce oil at some level to pay interest on their debt.

"Companies need to reinvest in order to pay those interest expenses," Byrne said. "A lot of balance sheets of companies are coming under stress. If you spend too much, then you have to increase debt."

Much of Anadarko's debt stems from a $4.05 billion lawsuit settlement related to pollution caused by spinoff Tronox Ltd. and another $4 billion payment to BP to settle claims associated with the 2010 Gulf oil spill. The remaining debt has funded billions in capital investments in Northern Colorado's prolific Wattenberg oil field.

Anadarko's borrowing comes as West Texas Intermediate crude spot prices have fallen to the mid-$50-per-barrel range from highs exceeding $100 last summer. Responding to the market downturn, Anadarko has cut its capital spending by 33 percent to no more than $5.8 billion companywide. In the Wattenberg, the company plans a 20 percent capital spending reduction to $1.8 billion from $2.2 billion.

Other oil companies operating in Northern Colorado, too, have accumulated debt since 2010, a year after the onset of the region's shale oil boom when Denver-based EOG Resources Inc. (NYSE: EOG) drilled the prolific well known as "Jake."

If oil prices stay low for several years, companies with sizeable debts could be in trouble, said David Beard, managing director of energy equity research for Iberia Capital Partners in New Orleans.

Oil companies have to pay back banks first, leaving less money for drilling and leading to less production.

"Banks come first, but you have to keep drilling to keep production up," he said. "That's where companies can get in trouble."

"Debt does take money away from these guys, you can't deny that," he added. "That's part of why you're seeing such a dramatic cutback in drilling."

At $6.2 billion, Houston-based Noble Energy Inc. (NYSE: NBL), Weld's No. 2 oil producer, has nearly three times the debt compared with its $2.3 billion in 2010. Another company operating in Northern Colorado, Houston-based Carrizo Oil & Gas (Nasdaq:

“You don’t want to get to the point where your debt load is mismatched to your base of production: It’s not great to have declining volumes.”

James Sullivan, vice president and senior analyst, Alembic Global Advisors

CRZO), has more than doubled its debt to $1.4 billion from $558.3 million in 2010. Denver-based PDC Energy Inc. (Nasdaq: PDCE) has debt of $664.9 million, up from $280.7 million.

Platteville-based Synergy Resources Corp. (NYSE MKT: SYRG) had no debt at the end of fiscal 2010. The company had $146 million in debt at the end of February, though it also had $218 million in cash and equivalents.

If Synergy paid off its debt, it would have $72 million in cash, said Jon Kruljac, vice president of capital markets and investor relations for Synergy.

“If we elected, we could pay our debt and still have cash,” he said.

Companies have continued to spend to keep production flowing and make debt service payments, said James Sullivan, vice president and senior analyst for Alembic Global Advisors in New York City.

“It’s not necessarily that you want to grow at any price, but these are declining assets if you don’t feed them cash,” said Sullivan, who covers Anadarko. “You don’t want to get to the point where your debt load is mismatched to your base of production: It’s not great to have declining volumes.”

Anadarko, for one, has debt service payments of approximately $800 million annually, so it must keep production flowing at a reasonable rate to generate income to do so, he said.

Anadarko spokeswoman Robin Olsen said the company has a strong cash position with more than $2 billion in cash on hand and access to ample liquidity.

“This gives us high confidence in our capital structure, as we focus on preserving that financial strength in the current commodity-price environment,” she said.

Analysts are wary of the rising debt loads.

A number of companies have sought equity through secondary offerings to pay down debt and fund spending programs, Byrne said. But if companies overspend, they risk default.

“If the industry comes under stress and they default on their debt, what is the impact to regional banks and people who are holding that debt?” he said. Additionally, “Certain areas are going to be seeing a dramatic decrease in taxes from the oil and gas industry... So it has a ripple effect on the economy.”

The company with the greatest debt, Anadarko, has upcoming senior debt maturities including $1.75 billion in 2016 and $2 billion in 2017, according to Morningstar. Anadarko received a –BBB credit rating from Morningstar, meaning the investment firm believes the oil company is a moderate default risk. The credit rating was increased from its previous rating of BB+, an above average default risk.

Morningstar expects Anadarko’s debt levels to hold steady as lower commodity prices pressure margins and cash flow, according to the research note.

However, the note paints a stark portrait of Anadarko’s risks, which include delays and cost overruns on Anadarko’s deep-water offshore drilling projects, political instability in some of the company’s operating regions and regulatory headwinds that could reduce profitability.

“One of Anadarko’s biggest risks is a substantial and prolonged drop in oil and gas prices, which would depress profits, slow development plans and reduce the value of its properties,” reads the research note. ■

Three community solar bills pass Colorado Legislature

By Tom Locke
news@bizwestmedia.com

It just got easier to participate in solar energy, even if your house is shaded by trees or has no good south-facing exposure—or even if you don’t own your own house.

In the session ended May 6, the Colorado Legislature passed three important bills that will make community solar gardens more accessible.

Solar gardens allow community members to take stakes in arrays of electricity-producing solar panels. In 2010 Colorado became the first state with legislation promoting them; the 2015 Legislature furthered that promotion with SB 46, HB 1284 and HB 1219.

SB 46

SB 46 allows rural electric cooperatives to count community solar gardens as “retail distributed generation” (generation on the consumer’s side of the meter) in fulfilling their state-mandated renewable energy requirements. “With the new legislation you’ll see a lot more activity with co-ops [on community solar gardens],” said Gwen Farnsworth, senior policy analyst with Boulder-based Western Resource Advocates.

About 70 percent of homes aren’t ideal candidates for rooftop solar, and people with those homes have community solar as a “neat option,” said Jerry Marizza, new energy program coordinator for Brighton-based United Power Inc.

SB 46 also enables co-ops to “subtract industrial retail sales from total retail sales in calculating its minimum retail distributed generation requirement,” says the bill. That’s important to co-ops that sell a high percentage of their energy to industrial users and otherwise would not have the residential rooftops needed to meet the mandated numbers, said Troy Whitmore, a spokesman for United Power.

Fort Collins-based Poudre Valley REA benefits from the passage of SB 46 partly because it already has 750 kilowatts of capacity in two community solar gardens with 120 individuals participating, said member relations manager David White. Solar gardens are “very popular with our members.”

Tom Figel, policy and utilities relations manager for GRID Alternatives Colorado, based in Denver, said his nonprofit, which supported SB 46, is bringing community solar to low-income people with a model that enables participants to save 50 percent on their electrical bills. The first project is in Grand Junction and is set for a June operational start. The Denver organization is an affiliate of GRID Alternatives, a national nonprofit solar installer headquartered in Oakland California.

Tom Hunt, a vice president for Louisville-based Clean Energy Collective LLC, said CEC was “very supportive” of SB 46 because it resolves uncertainty for the coops. CEC leads the nation in number of community solar projects, with 45 projects either built or under development, 21 of which are in Colorado, he said. CEC has doubled its employment over the past year, to 110, and was named 194th on the 2014 Inc. 500 list for revenue growth of 2,217 percent between 2010 and 2013.

HB 1284

CEC also will benefit from the passage of HB 1284, which loosens restrictions on who can take a stake in community solar gardens built by investor-owned utilities (such as Minneapolis-based Xcel Energy), said Hunt. HB 1284 enables a customer to take a stake in a community solar garden in an adjacent county regardless of the number of people in the customer's county. Before, the customer's county had to have fewer than 20,000 people. The change "should drive the cost down," said Hunt.

For instance, cheap land in Adams County could be used for a solar garden subscribed to by Denver residents, said Karen Gados, spokeswoman for Denver-based solar developer Sun-Share LLC. "It makes community solar more available to more people."

HB 1219 helps solar energy developers convert enterprise zone tax credits to cash. Its passage is a "big deal for us," said Eric Blank, co-founder of Boulder-based developer Community Energy Inc. "It's a material benefit for renewable energy."

Sarah Propst, executive director of Interwest Energy Alliance, a Santa Fe-based nonprofit trade association, said HB 1219 enables

new energy program coordinator for Brighton-based United Power Inc

the developer to choose to take the tax credit or to take up to 80 percent of the tax credit in cash, with a cap of $750,000 per year. So "20 percent (of the tax credit) goes back to the state in order to get the money up front sooner," she said. "It obviously makes Colorado more attractive for investment in renewable energy." ■

Transportation is one bright spot in an otherwise slow year for mergers and acquisitions in the oil and gas sector.

WIKICOMMONS

Oil-price downturn stalls deal making too

Exploration activity slowing dramatically, but some improvement in transportation deals

By Dallas Heltzell
dheltzell@bizwestmedia.com

Among the many ripples created by last year's world-wide drop in oil prices has been a decrease in the value and volume of deals in some sectors of the oil and gas industry, with exploration mergers and acquisitions stalled, and some growth in transportation and storage transactions, according to a new report.

A first-quarter analysis of oil and gas mergers and acquisitions issued May 7 by PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP, indicates that deal activity nationwide in the "upstream" segment – exploration and drilling – dropped significantly in the first quarter, although "midstream" deals – involving the transportation of crude or refined petroleum products by pipeline, rail, truck, barge or tanker, as well as its storage and wholesale marketing – showed a 47 percent growth in deal volume and a 398 percent growth in deal value compared with the first quarter of 2014.

In Northern Colorado and the Boulder Valley, oil and gas activity for the past 45 years has been centered on the Wattenberg Field, which was one of the first places hydraulic fracturing became a common practice. The field covers more than 2,000 square miles between Greeley and Denver, mostly in Weld County but extending into parts of Boulder, Broomfield, Larimer and Adams counties. The oil and gas is extracted largely from sandstone and shale "plays" or defined geographic areas.

According to PwC, activity in the upstream sector related to shale plays dropped to four transactions and accounted for $588 million, or 33 percent of total upstream deal volume and 16 percent of the total upstream deal value in the first quarter of 2015. However, four midstream shale-related deals in the first quarter of 2015 accounted for $4.6 billion, or a 160 percent increase in deal value compared to the same period in 2014.

"The Rockies market had one megadeal in the midstream space at the beginning of the first quarter which drove the overall deal value in the region," said Rowena Cipriano-Reyes, a Denver-based partner with PwC's energy practice. "Although oil and gas deal activity for upstream companies in the Rockies market was historically low, the softness in deal-making activity is consistent with national trends caused by low oil and natural gas prices."

Doug Meier, PwC's U.S. energy-sector deals analyst, said there are ways to take advantage of the low numbers.

"The current low-price environment may present opportunities for potential acquirers who have the balance sheets to finance deals and the investing horizon to see through the current lows of the business cycle," he said. "We're working with companies to develop programs to help them navigate the down cycles and be positioned for the up cycle."

That may be starting to happen. When Noble Energy, which operates many fields in Weld County, announced on May 11 that it would buy Rosetta Resources, analysts saw it as the first acquisition of a significant U.S. shale-oil producer since the late-2014 fall in crude prices. ■

Oil and Gas Task Force finalizes proposals

Critics contend they fail to address toughest problems

By Steve Lynn
news@bizwestmedia.com

State agencies are vying for millions in budget money to carry out recommendations of Gov. John Hickenlooper's oil and gas task force, but the most influential recommendations will have to wait until the Colorado Oil and Gas Conservation Commission begins rulemaking, it is hoped, later this year.

The Joint Budget Committee has approved $1.3 million from the state for a dozen new positions at the state oil commission, said Todd Hartman, spokesman for the state Department of Natural Resources, which oversees the state oil commission. Those positions consist of three inspectors, three environmental protection specialists, three engineering staff members, two hearings staff members and one information technology staff member.

"We have been focused on getting the budget priorities fulfilled during the legislative session – the recommendations that require dollars for staff, et cetera," Hartman said. "After the session, we will begin to focus on the rulemaking process for the proposals that require that element."

Hickenlooper formed the task force to recommend ways to reduce land-use conflicts related to oil and gas facilities around homes, schools, businesses and recreation areas. Creation of the task force headed off ballot initiatives backed by U.S. Rep. Jared Polis, D-Colo., that would have restricted oil and gas development.

The effort came as oil and gas wells drilled near homes and schools in urban areas raised concerns and sparked activism from Lafayette and Boulder to Greeley and Fort Collins. Weld County, meanwhile, has set records for oil production, with the region producing 80 percent of the state's oil.

The task force in February voted to approve nine recommendations, including one that would involve more local government participation and increased discretion by the state oil commission director concerning large-scale oil and gas facilities, including locations with multiple wells in

The oil and gas task force's nine recommendations:

1. A recommendation for local governments, Colorado Oil and Gas Conservation Commission and producers to coordinate oil and gas locations and urban planning. The recommendation calls for a process to improve local government participation in processing drilling permits for large-scale oil and gas facilities in urban areas, as well as defining the scope of those kinds of facilities.

2. A proposal to require oil company registration with certain local government officials. Upon request from a municipal "local government designee," an oil company must submit operational information for the purpose of incorporating potential oil and gas development into local comprehensive plans. For example, an oil company would have to estimate how many wells it plans to drill in a city in over five years.

3. A recommendation that the state oil commission ensure that the local government designees functions are "fully utilized and that they are adequately and properly resourced." The proposal includes a requirement for the state oil commission to reach out to local governments to educate them on the local government designee program as well as offering financial support to train local officials.

4. A proposal for the state oil commission to hire a dozen additional full-time employees for environmental investigations, inspections, tracking citizen complaints and other duties. Increasing the number of inspectors will allow the state oil commission to monitor wells more often.

5. The Colorado Department of Public Health and Environment should establish a health and information hotline and website and mobile air quality monitoring unit as well as research risks posed by oil and gas development to human health.

6. The Colorado Energy Office should establish a clearinghouse to communicate information on the state's oil and gas industry "to foster an improved understanding of oil and gas industry activities."

7. A recommendation that the state oil commission implement a program to help producers comply with "complicated and ever-changing operating rules and policies, and to assure that inspectors are enforcing those rules and policies in a consistent manner."

8. The General Assembly should approve Senate Bill 100, the 2015 Rule Review Bill. The measure is introduced annually to postpone the expiration of all new state regulations adopted during the previous year. The bill would allow the February 2014 oil and gas methane rules to continue without expiration.

9. A proposal for the state oil commission and Colorado Department of Transportation to convene a working group to investigate steps that government and industry can take to reduce the use of large trucks and trailers in oil and gas activities.

Sara Barwinski, a member of the 21-member oil and gas task force, said she hoped the state oil commission takes up rule-making on the recommendation by the end of the year.

“The most significant thing we did is recommend the rule-making on proximity, intensity and scale of these large, multi-well sites.” said Barwinski, a member of activist group Weld Air and Water. “It’s where we spent the majority of our time, and I think it has the most promise.”

Ahead of the rulemaking, the Colorado Department of Public Health and Environment has sought nearly $1.4 million to carry out its share of the recommendations.

More than $360,000 will fund a phone line and website to respond to oil and gas health concerns and $403,000 will fund a mobile air monitoring unit. Both of those projects are part of next fiscal year’s state budget.

The health line will give the department a chance to respond to people’s health concerns related to oil and gas, said Dr. Larry Wolk, executive director of the health department. That will be combined with another recommendation for the Colorado Energy Office to create an information clearinghouse on oil and gas to fulfill an unmet need.

“The general public has these concerns but doesn’t know who to go to or where to go with these concerns other than their physician or health care provider,” Wolk said.

As part of the mobile unit, a vehicle outfitted with air quality monitoring technology will respond to complaints about pollution from oil and gas facilities near locations such as schools and neighborhoods.

“If we get a concentration of calls from a particular area, then we want to have the ability to go out and use a mobile monitoring unit so that we can set up and take a look at values for potentially hazardous air pollutants,” he said.

The third component, an oil and gas health risk study, will have to wait until the next budget year. The state agency will wait for emissions data from Colorado State University research under way on the Western Slope and Northern Colorado, Wolk said. The health department will use the emissions data to assess risks to human health.

Despite the recommendations, discontent remains and the Legislature likely will revisit oil and gas regulations next session.

Rep. Mike Foote, D-Lafayette, said the task force did not address the main issue that it was supposed to resolve: land-use conflicts among people who live near oil and gas wells.

“The task force didn’t really give us much to work from,” Foote said. “What they did give us were nine very minimal recommendations.” ■

The machines don't milk the cows. Power does.

Like a great worker, power gets it done. Power enables agriculture and industry to prosper. So Poudre Valley REA is working hard to make sure that power is reliable, affordable and responsible. We're striving to help homeowners, farmers and ranchers, and businesses use power wisely. In doing so, members of PVREA save money and make better use of resources. 1ST NATIONAL BANK EXHIBITION HALL

Northern Colorado has emerged as one of the nation's premiere centers for energy development including oil and natural gas. Bring your business to the forefront of the conversation by sponsoring and attending Energy Summit 2015. During this third annual event, leading voices in the region's oil and gas business will offer insights and the latest intelligence from the field and the Capitol.

SPOTLIGHT YOUR COMPANY!

Sponsorships are available or showcase your company in the exhibit hall.
