Flood waters ravaged towns such as Lyons, wiping out roads, water facilities, homes and businesses.

Cost of high waters: $2 billion

September floods second-most expensive in Colorado's history

BY MELISSA SCHAAF

The September 2013 flood is projected to be the second most expensive flood in Colorado history. Costs to cleanup, rebuild and reconstruct are estimated at $2 billion, second only to the 1965 South Platte River Basin flood which cost approximately $3 billion in today's dollars, according to Boulder County Office of Emergency Management director Mike Chard.

As of April 4, Boulder County has reported over $262 million in costs relating to the flood, including emergency response, property damage, road, bridge and other transportation damage, debris removal, parks and open space damage and repairs.

Up until now, recovery efforts have focused on debris cleanup and short-term repairs. Long-term projects are just taking off now.

"We anticipate it going on for two to three years because of the magnitude of the event," said Katie Arrington, Boulder County flood recovery coordinator.

One of the projects underway is the continual debris cleanup of rivers and creeks in anticipation of spring runoff waters.

"There are high threats or hazards in creeks as a result of flood damage to the river banks," Chard said. "Woody debris could start floating again and clog culverts and bridges. We're working to make things safe, not pretty. Creek and riverbed programs will be in place to restore ecosystems and natural habitats. What people are seeing right now has nothing to do with that; we're asking people to be patient."

Arrington said that the river and creek bed debris removal project will cost Boulder County $14 million. That number, however, is not fixed and could change if additional repairs are noted.

"Projects and priorities keep changing because we keep finding new things to work on," she said. "These numbers could change tomorrow depending on what we find. We should have hard numbers in the next six months to a year, but won't really know until then the final cost."

The communities affected by the flood are working with the state and with the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) for restoration project funding through the Hazard Mitigation Grant Program. This program allows cities, counties and tribes to apply for grants to help fund certain projects. A proposal must be submitted to the state and approved, before it is passed on to FEMA to determine if it is eligible for funding.

According to FEMA, projects that are eligible for funding include, acquiring and relocating structures from hazard-prone areas; retrofitting structures to protect them from future weather events or natural hazards; and constructing minor and local flood-control projects.

If a project is approved, FEMA will fund up to 75 percent of the total cost. The remaining 25 percent is split between the state and the proposing city, county or tribe.

"The long and short of it is, local communities are trying to prevent future storm damage, but there are a lot of different ways of going about it," said a FEMA spokesperson.

While cities and counties may be feeling the financial burden of reconstruction, local businesses have racked up debt of their own.

Tory and Berenice Nelson, owners of the Wapiti Pub in Estes Park, have spent over $300,000 in cleanup and restoration costs. The building owner, separate from the Nelsons, did not have flood insurance at the time of the flood.

"There was about three feet of water in the building," Tory Nelson said. "Between that and the mud, the initial shock of the damage was quite a bit."

Despite the damage, the Nelsons were hopeful that the repairs and renovations wouldn't take long.

"In the beginning, we thought we could get things cleaned up, scrubbed down and open in a couple of weeks," Nelson said. "Then we thought it would only be a couple of months. It took a lot longer than we anticipated."

The cost was a shock, as well.

"We ended up spending quite a bit more than we anticipated," he said. "In addition to the initial clean up, the cost of commercial finishes over residential-based finishes were estimated to be much higher by contractors. We also had to do code compliance upgrades, and cut into the concrete floor to remove and replace plumbing. It all added up."

The Nelsons have worked with the U.S. Small Business Administration (SBA) for emergency business loan funding, which has helped pay for new furniture, refrigeration, drywall, restrooms and a full remodel of the restaurant.

The Wapiti Pub was able to reopen on April 14. And, even though business is up and running, Nelson said they restorations are only about 85 percent of the way done.

To rebuild or not?

New floodplain remapping rules leave homeowners in ravaged areas adrift

BY MELISSA SCHAAF

Hundreds of homes and businesses that for years sat along Colorado's hallmark mountain streams saw their homes and the land beneath washed away in the massive flooding that occurred last September. People who once had river front property not only lost their homes, they also lost their property. When the flood waters cleared, millions of tons of earth were gone and whole stream channels had shifted.

Now each of the affected floodplains is being re-examined by local building departments and national flood agencies to determine what can and cannot be rebuilt.

Flood-affected property owners face tough decisions on whether or start over and build anew. For some, these decisions are being made for them.

For months now, properties have been undergoing reviews and assessments to determine whether or not individuals can rebuild in the same spot on the same piece of land. Some are eligible to rebuild, but only if they adhere to certain regulations. Others, however, are simply out of luck. Additionally, property owners must look to the future when Colorado flood zones will be re-mapped. Newly reconstructed homes could potentially fall into different flood zones, affecting insurance premiums and decreasing total property values.

"Rebuilding is critical to me as the owner – this is my livelihood and also my retirement," said Steve Childs, owner of The General Store in Glen Haven. "Had we not been able to rebuild, we would have been up a creek without a paddle."

The General Store in Glen Haven has been an icon of the town for more than 100 years. Becky and Steve Childs have owned it for the last 34 years.

"Aside from its importance to me from a business standpoint, it's really important to the community," Childs said. “The store has always identified with the community, and the community with the store.”

In Larimer County, 139 structures have been barred from rebuilding in the same location, according to Land Development Review Engineer and Floodplain Manager Eric Tracy. Of those, 66 are primary structures while the rest are outbuildings such as garages or sheds. An additional 41 structures were flagged as substantially damaged, and of these 23 were primary structures. Substantially damaged structures can be rebuilt as long as they can be raised sufficiently – 18 inches above base flood elevation - to meet new requirements. Property owners have the right to appeal the outcome of the assessments.

“Structures that were substantially damaged – more than 50 percent of the value of the structure – and were located within the floodway overlay zone have received letters indicating they cannot rebuild the structure in the same location as it was before,” Tracy said via email.

A floodway is the area surrounding a river channel or body of water where drainage is directed without accumulating water elevation of more than 0.5 feet.

For the Childs’, The General Store barely missed being classed as substantially damaged. The General Store came in at 46.4 percent. This means they were given the go-ahead to rebuild in the same location without having to raise the store 18 inches in elevation.

Others in Glen Haven along County Road 43 have not fared as well.

“There were a lot of businesses wiped away,” Childs said. “It’s been really hard on some people. I know one lady moved away to try and reopen her business. The owner of Pony Tracks Trading Post would desperately like to reopen the business, but they certainly can’t do it on the property that the business originally sat on.”

Although some businesses and homeowners have been green-lighted to rebuild, or raise and rebuild to comply with elevation requirements, future flood zone remapping may result in a depreciation of property value and a rise in insurance premiums.

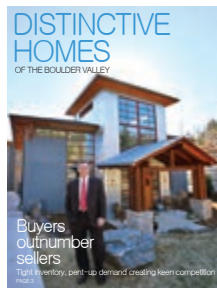

“If a structure is eligible and an individual chooses to rebuild or repair based on current regulatory data, they may do so, but they run the risk of being negatively impacted when the new mapping is complete,” Tracy said. “Changes in the Avery Brewing's new brewery and distribution center in Gunbarrel is among several projects reshaping this quiet community.

New apartments mean workers can now live close by

JOSHUA LINDENSTEIN

BOULDER – It's no coincidence that Bill McDermid believes the retail portion of his Gunbarrel Gateway development could finally gain momentum and lock up a restaurant operator any day.

Three new apartment complexes will bring 550 new units to the core of this quiet northeast Boulder community over the next 12 months, boosting the population by some 10 percent, according to city projections.

Traditionally spread out with a mix of residential and industrial space, the major bump in density should help lure the retail and other amenities that residents and workers in the area have long desired.

"These apartments coming in certainly help quite a bit," McDermid said. His Gunbarrel Gateway sits at the southeast corner of the Diagonal Highway and 63rd Street, just west of the new apartment complexes.

Gunbarrel sits at the northeastern edge of Boulder, with portions inside and outside the city limits. The city estimates that Gunbarrel's 2012 population was 10,420, with nearly 9,000 of those residents living in unincorporated Boulder County. Gunbarrel businesses employed 15,260 people in 2012, with more than 14,000 of those within the city limits.

Using a city formula that factors in current occupancy rates of rental units and average number of persons per household in the city, those 550 apartments should add about 1,150 new residents, all within the city limits and all within blocks of each other.

Such density will no doubt mean increased traffic for the area. But Charles Ferro, development review manager for Boulder, said traffic hasn't emerged as a major concern yet and city studies indicate existing roads have plenty of capacity.

The city adopted an area plan for Gunbarrel in 2004 that laid out the roadmap for development. Ferro said one of the main concerns has come from single-family homeowners worried about views being impacted. But he said most of those worries have eased as residents have gotten an understanding of how the new projects would be laid out.

"It seems like there's general excitement that there's renewed interest in the area," Ferro said.

McDermid's Boulder Hospitality LLC completed a Hampton Inn and Suites at 6333 Lookout Road as the first piece of the Gunbarrel Gateway development last summer. But the retail portions have been slower to land tenants.

Gunbarrel Gateway secured entitlements from the city more than a year ago to build on three separate pad sites in front of the hotel. Two are one-story buildings of about 6,500 square feet each, one that will be a standalone restaurant and the other a mix of retail and food and beverage uses. The third building, likely to be constructed last, is a two story, 12,500-square-foot building that will include office space on the second floor above ground-floor retail.

McDermid said the Hampton Inn has had a booming start and is full Monday through Thursday with business travelers. Having mostly open space to the north instead of rooftops has made it difficult to attract major retail and restaurant chains to the site. But local retailers, he said, are starting to see the promise the area holds. He said he is close to signing an "established local group" for the freestanding restaurant.

In downtown Fort Collins, a former power plant gets a new life, operating as an innovative engine lab for Colorado State University.

Power on: CSU engine lab open

New facility breaks ground on energy and engineering

BY STEVE LYNN
slynn@ncbr.com

FORT COLLINS—With its windowed offices, wide-open laboratory spaces and solar-panel covered roof, Powerhouse Energy Campus looks and feels nothing like the average university building.

Powerhouse, built at the site of the old Fort Collins power plant built in 1935 and abandoned in 1988, adds 65,000 square feet to the old 35,000-square-foot power plant housing the CSU Engines and Energy Conversion Lab.

The $18.5 million building, including classroom, office and lab and research space, had its grand opening in April.

Built in 18 months, the building is seeking platinum certification from Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design, the highest standards in the green-building certification program. The building has a 20-kilowatt rooftop solar array, custom light-emitting diodes (LED) and a cooling system that does not use traditional air-conditioning. Another 25 kilowatts of solar panels will be installed this summer.

Computer modeling predicts the Powerhouse will achieve about 50 percent to 55 percent energy savings compared to other commercial and industrial buildings – well above the 48 percent required to meet LEED Platinum status, according to CSU.

Powerhouse does not contain a traditional air conditioning system. Instead, the building is cooled by a 26-mile network of tubing that circulates chilled water. Metal panels on the outside of the addition are the same as the kind used in commercial freezer systems. The interlocking panels help prevent air leaking from the building.

The Neenan Co. in Fort Collins built Powerhouse in 18 months. But the project took nearly two years to design, with 50 to 60 people attending weekly planning meetings. Subcontractors included engineering firm AE Associates Inc., and SRB Consulting Engineering in Fort Collins.

“This is new for me,” said Bob Hosanna, architect and senior design manager for Neenan. “On a collaborative side, that's how we work all the time, but we generally don't have this kind of time-frame for projects."

Activities at Powerhouse center on reducing emissions from industrial engines from companies such as Woodward Inc. (Nasdaq: WWD), Caterpillar Inc. (NYSE: CAT) and Cummins Inc. (NYSE: CMI). The university received $2.5 million from Woodward for its construction and another $5 million from billionaire Pat Stryker's Bohemian Foundation.

Powerhouse was built with teamwork in mind. Large open spaces characterize the building's laboratories and offices are arranged facing one another in a circular fashion.

"We wanted a sense of openness and collaboration," said Bryan Willson, founder and co-director of the Engines and Energy Conversion Lab.

Multiple other organizations have moved into the expanded building, including the Center for the New Energy Economy and the Department of Mechanical Engineering's Industrial Assessment Center. The idea is to spur innovation between technologists and energy policy wonks. Additionally, the building has space for 25 startups and growing companies.

The building alone is a work of architectural innovation, in part because the university built Powerhouse with private funding, freeing CSU from constraints of state standards governing construction of university buildings. It also helped the university save money on the building by not having to follow arduous state building rules.

"The state has a manual that specifies how a state building is built," Willson said. "You wouldn't have been able to get the innovation and flexibility that we have here."

The contemporary building maintains the historic character of the old power plant with red brick walls and exposed steel I-beams. But instead of smoke stacks, it will have custom-built wind turbines in their place. Algae ponds will fill one section of the roof for biofuels research.

Embedded in the I-beams are sophisticated LEDs that attach to the ceiling with magnets. Heat from the lights is absorbed by the floor slabs and is transferred back into the system.

The building also contains radiant heating and geothermal cooling from a crisp aquifer below the building. Boulder-based Sundolier Inc. installed a lighting unit on the roof that will capture sunlight and funnel natural light into the building.

The lighting fixture represents just one of many technological advances on the building's exterior, while much of the innovation occurred on the inside.

Other buildings might have edgy facades, but inside, they have the same forced-air ventilation, fluorescent lighting and conventional heating and chilling systems.

"It's very difficult to get innovation on the inside of the building," Willson said. "We really wanted to move beyond that in terms of innovation."

physical topography and/or new statistical hydrological assumptions may bring a structure that was outside of the mapped floodplain prior to the flood into a regulatory floodplain and subject them to flood insurance requirements. New mapping may also increase the regulatory flood elevation on an existing structure and that would in turn have a significant impact on their flood insurance premium."

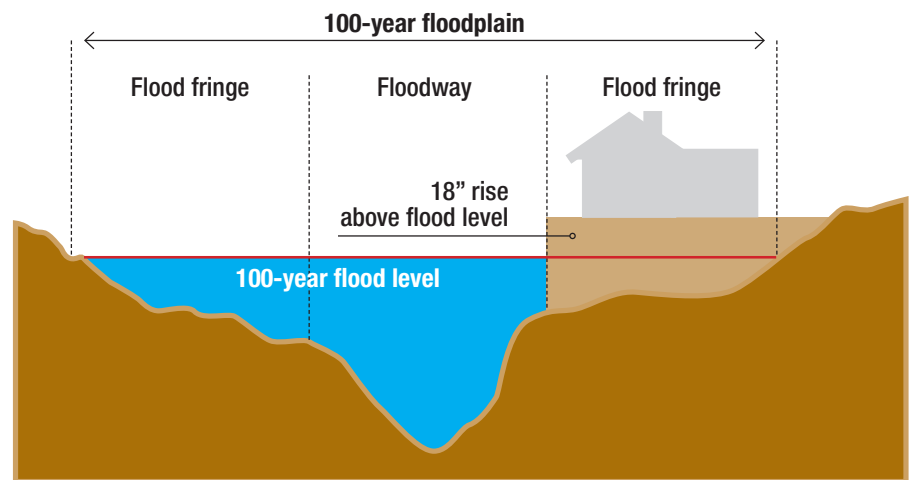

For many, this evolves into a long, drawn-out waiting game to see how they will be affected.

"Many people are waiting to rebuild for the next six months to over a year or more until they have some inkling of what these changes are going to look like and how they will be affected," said Katie Arrington, Boulder County flood recovery coordinator.

Despite potentially being remapped into a different flood zone, Childs said they are working diligently to have The General Store open by June.

"We still need to replace freezers, ice cream stuff, the deli case, all the equipment it takes to run a business like this," he said.

"We're shooting to be open by June 1. I don't know if we'll have anything to serve people, but that's the goal. I hope we make it."

Hotel development drawing nearer for downtown Greeley

City council chambers, court to relocate as part of new project

BY MOLLY ARMBRISTER
marmbrister@ncbr.com

GREELEY – A new $20 million hotel for downtown Greeley could be approved as early as this summer if all goes as planned between the city of Greeley and its private partner.

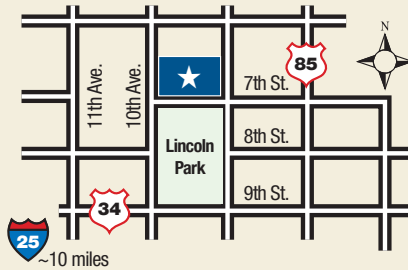

The city last year chose a hotel developer to work on the project, but does not yet have a confirmed deal in writing, so the name of the company is still under wraps, according to assistant city manager Becky Safarik.

But the developer is working on securing its financing package for the project, which will be located at 919 Seventh St. in Greeley, just north of Lincoln Park. The company has the bank financing in place, Safarik said, and is now working on an investor package to round out the financial needs of the development.

The developer expects to have the financing package in place within six weeks, Safarik said, and then site plans and renderings can be submitted to the city for approval.

If all goes as planned, that approval will be given by mid-summer, opening the door for a groundbreaking soon after, she said.

The hotel will include 150 rooms, according to the city's economic development director, Bruce Biggi, and between 5,000 and 7,000 square feet of conference space.

New parking will also have to be added to the downtown area in order to make way for the hotel. A garden-level parking structure will be constructed to serve hotel patrons, Safarik said.

But another parking structure will have to be built to make up for other parking that will be lost as a result of the hotel's development.

A municipal building currently sits on the lot where the hotel will go, according to Biggi. This building houses the fire district, municipal court and city council chambers. The lot also has about 200 parking spaces that will have to be sacrificed, and council chambers will be to be moved elsewhere. The developer will lease the land under the hotel.

To continue serving the needs of the city employees who park their cars downtown, more parking will be required, according to Safarik. There are lots available that can be used temporarily, but for long-term use, a parking garage will be needed.

The Greeley Downtown Development Authority will likely step in to assist with the parking issue, according to DDA executive director Pam Bricker.

The DDA will use tax increment

Integrated Design Assistance Program

Financial incentives for new construction and major renovation

Benefits of Design Assistance

The Integrated Design Assistance Program (IDAP) supports project owners, developers, design professionals and builders to create high-performance buildings.

Incentives

Financial incentives for building owners and design teams are available for participating in the IDAP.

The program is based on the Architecture 2030 Challenge® and provides design, construction and performance incentives.

New construction and major renovation projects are eligible.

Information

For more information, including detailed program eligibility, visit fcgov.com/idap or contact Utilities, 970-221-6700, TDD 224-6003 or email utilities@fcgov.com.

GUNBARREL from 7

The three apartment projects helping fuel much of that interest are Alexan Flatirons at 5460 Spine Road, Boulder View 6655 Lookout Road, and Gunbarrel Center at the southwest corner of Gunpark Drive and Lookout Road.

Dirtwork is underway for Gunbarrel Center, which includes 251 apartments, a park, structured parking and about 29,000 square feet of commercial space along a new "Main Street" that will bisect the development. Boulder View is a 68-unit apartment complex slated for completion in July. And the $45 million Alexan Flatirons includes 231 apartments and about 1,500 square feet of retail space, the first units of which will be completed by July with buildout slated for March of 2015.

Given Boulder's tight rental market and the high number of people commuting each day to such major Gunbarrel employers as IBM, Crispin Porter + Bogusky, Celestial Seasonings and SpectraLogic, Alexan's developers are confident they can convince a share of Gunbarrel's work force to end their commutes.

"If you put places to live near where people work, people will live in them," said Matt Schilet, managing director of Alexan developer Trammell Crow Residential in Denver.

Gunbarrel has long been home to some of Boulder's major employers, a list that also includes businesses like Covidien, MicroMotion, Lockheed Martin and Northrup Grumman. The new retail on the way at Gunbarrel Center and Gunbarrel Gateway will help satisfy businesses' desire for more amenities for employees, said Liz Hanson, the city's economic vitality coordinator.

"I think it really starts to change the business community in that area, their perception of what Gunbarrel can be," Hanson said.

Another employer on the way to Gunbarrel is Avery Brewing Co. It plans to construct a new brewery and restaurant on 5.6 acres at 4910 Nautilus Court. The East Boulder-based brewery expects to be making beer there by the end of the year and be completely moved to its new digs by January. The $27 million first phase of the project will be 51,000 square feet, including a restaurant, offices and production space. A later second phase will add to each of those aspects as the company grows.

Avery employs 95 people now, but owner Adam Avery said he expects that number to balloon to 150 within three or four months of moving into the new facility.

Avery said his brewery received overtures from multiple neighboring municipalities that offered free land and other incentives to relocate. But in the end, the company wanted to stay in Boulder, and Gunbarrel fit the bill.

"We've got great Flatiron views," Avery said. "It's up pretty high. The size of the property was right. We'll be able to grow out there for a long time."

HOTEL from 11

financing to help pay for new parking, Bricker said. DDAs use tax-increment financing, or TIF, to help with projects that have a public benefit.

The amount of TIF that will be needed is still unknown, Bricker said.

“Until the site plan is finalized, it will be hard to say how much TIF will be needed,” she said. “We’re hoping that by summer, activity will begin.”

A downtown hotel in Greeley has been on the wish list of many for several years, and outside consultants agree that such a development would be beneficial to the burgeoning downtown economy.

A report compiled by Denver-based Progressive Urban Management Associates in 2011 for the DDA mentioned a full-service downtown hotel as a catalyst for the area. Such a hotel “could be an ideal partner in a mixed-use development as an activity and economic generator,” the report states. It also notes that the majority of hotel rooms in Greeley are located on the outskirts of town, mostly along U.S.

Highways 34 and 85.

Another hotel, Candlewood Suites, opened in west Greeley last fall, helping to ease the room shortage that has increased steadily with the presence of oil and gas workers in the area.

Downtown Greeley has seen its own share of growth in recent years, with the DDA going into overdrive following the PUMA report. New road construction and fresh faces in the business community, including restaurants such as Tilted Kilt, which opened earlier this year, have helped put the once-quiet district on the map.

Summer 2014 will also mark the third year of downtown Greeley’s Go-Cup District, which encompasses the Ninth Street Plaza and allows patrons to take alcoholic beverages outside participating restaurants while shopping or watching plaza entertainment on specific nights.

The district is popular with both residents and visitors to Greeley, drawing large crowds downtown to hear live music from May to September.

Renovation of Casey Middle School leads to LEED Platinum certification

Building honors school's past, looks to the future

BY MICHELLE VENUS

Special to BizWest

BOULDER — The rebuilding of Casey Middle School in Boulder is a combination of sustainability and historic preservation.

A renovation project that began in 2010 incorporated two façades from the original 1924 structure, resulting in an intriguing — and challenging — project for Fort Collins-based RB+B Architects Inc.

Its sustainable features helped the school achieve LEED Platinum certification from the U.S. Green Building Council. Casey is the second middle school in the country to earn the highest level of certification and the first in the state of Colorado.

“We worked with a design advisory team comprised of community members and representatives from the city and the (Boulder Valley) school district,” said Derek Young, architect with RB+B and the project manager for the Casey project. “What we heard is that the building was outdated and losing students to more modern schools in the district, but that the historical nature of the existing structure was a meaningful connection to the neighborhood.”

Working with Saunders Construction Inc. of Centennial, the RB+B team devised a system that shored up the south and west exterior walls while the rest of the structure was demolished. Not an easy task, considering the site's expansive clay soil.

Groundbreaking achievement

“This is not something that has been done before,” Young explained. “It required designing and engineering a way to keep the walls intact and stable during the demo and the building. It was definitely one of the more challenging aspects of the entire project."

A wall of windows lets in natural light and provides a view of the school's entry courtyard. Instrument lockers and music rooms are on the right. The area connects the school to the gymnasium/auditorium wing.

The end result is a 106,458-square-foot, three-story, 34-classroom school that features solar panels for photovoltaic energy, which also double as a covering for bicycle parking, adding a green roof and replacing asphalt surfaces with concrete to help reduce the heat-island effect. Heat-island effects occur when developed urban and suburban areas retain more heat than rural areas.

Underground parking for faculty and staff reduces on-street parking issues. Installation of natural daylighting with automatic dimming systems, a ground source heat pump for both heating and cooling the building aid in reduced energy costs. Repurposed original gymnasium flooring serves as strategically placed, graphic wall treatments. A food pulper in the kitchen replaces garbage disposals and compresses food waste that is later composted.

Buildings earn LEED certification based on a rating system that measures environmental impact and human benefits. Projects are scored in several categories to achieve certification at one of four levels: Bronze, Silver, Gold or Platinum. In order to earn the highest level, a project must score more than 80 points out of a total of 110 possible points.

Costs to design and build the new school totaled $33 million and was funded in part by a bond issue approved in 2006 by Boulder Valley voters. The Boulder city council contributed $1.8 million for sustainable upgrades to the original design, which would have earned LEED Gold certification.

Casey Middle School has received several awards recognizing the forward thinking of the design and build teams.

It took three years to complete the rebuild project, including research, design, demolition and building. Retaining the original façades added approximately $500,000 to the overall costs, which were approved by the design advisory team.

Taking the toxins out of floor refinishing

Neven wants to educate consumers, change footprint of the industry

BY ELIZABETH GOLD

Special to BizWest

BOULDER — Skills learned from past job experience give a leg-up when an employee decides to break out and become an employer.

In the case of Shane Neven, it was seeing the negative results that can take place when a company grows.

"It's an advantage that I've worked for others and seen their processes and what's gotten them into trouble," he said. "Customer service seems to be the one thing that can go by the wayside."

To help his "green" floor-refinishing company, Artisan Roots Hardwoods LLC, dodge the potential problem, he keeps communication at the top of his to-do list.

"People want to know what's going on in their homes and what's being put on their floors. It's very challenging for homeowners."

To keep them in the loop Neven provides clients with daily progress reports and photos and videos. He starts each job with an extensive consultation that reviews the entire project, recommendations and schedule.

"We're homeowners and consumers, too," Robyn Krueger, co-owner added. "This is the second-largest investment people make in their home."

Krueger and Neven, who are both life and business partners, launched the company in May 2013.

"Our main goal is to educate consumers and change the footprint of this industry," Neven said.

Artisan Roots Hardwoods was chosen by Bona AB to represent them in this region. Bona, based in Sweden with operations in the United States, offers floor-care products with the environment in mind.

"It's a very prestigious honor," Krueger said. "They investigated our references and showed up at our job sites."

Bona's equipment provides a 100 percent dustless process and water-borne products. According to the company, it promotes the highest standards possible within the hardwood industry.

"Shane went through rigorous training and testing to become BONA certified," Krueger added.

"We use Bona processes and products because there are no toxins and no formaldehyde used," Neven said. "Many people still use toxic finishes that make it so they can't go back into their homes for days.

"What they don't realize is after that, when you walk on the floor it breaks off particles that go into the air."

As part of the education he provides customers, Neven clarifies misunderstandings. "For example, people think that bamboo is green, but traditionally when you get to the place where it's ready to be put in, it's been processed to the point where there's nothing green about it," he said.

"It's dried with formaldehyde so when you put a sander on it, all the toxins are exposed."

In addition to using green processes and products, being certified by BONA sets Neven apart from his competition in other ways.

"The hardwood floor industry is not a licensed trade. Anyone with a sander can say they'll do the job," he warned.

"BONA will actually warranty my work."

Artisan Roots Hardwoods installs, sands and finishes, restores and repairs hardwood floors. It is paired with a lumber company that provides handcrafted wood for floors and follows the same principles it follows.

Sustainable Lumber Co. in Montana is also a family-owned operation. It employs local Mennonite artisans to create one-of-a-kind, handcrafted wood.

All of the company's lumber comes from Montana from reclaimed wood, dead standing timber and SFI (Sustainable Forestry Initiative) certified. All leftovers are used in an outdoor wood burning furnace to kiln dry the wood.

"We wanted a true made-in-America product, and Sustainable Lumber's entire location is fully self-sustainable by hard-working hands," Neven said, adding that the each board is handled at least 12 times at the company to assure quality.

The benefit of kiln drying is that it stabilizes the wood.

"Wood is like a sponge — it swells when it's wet and shrinks when it's heated," Neven said.

If not kiln dried, wood can shrink about one-eighth of an inch when the heater is turned on and it will never re-expand.

To side step having to store inventory, Artisan Roots Hardwoods has its made-to-order lumber drop shipped to every clients' door.

The cost for standard size red oak to be installed, sanded and given a water-born finish is about $1,200 per 100 square feet.

RENOVATION from 107

electrical energy use, banks of windows in all four elevations and more than 100 Solatubes, which direct natural sunlight throughout the school, have helped to keep electricity costs even in the much larger building. An automatic dimming system synchronizes electrical light with natural light, ensuring efficient usage.

The ground source heat pump provides nearly 90 percent of the school's heating and cooling. The system consists of vertically drilled, buried piping and closed-loop boreholes that transfers heat to and from the ground heat exchanger with circulating heat-transfer fluid.

Depending on the season, the building's heat pumps either rejects the heat in the warm summertime or accepts it in the winter.

Additional standalone gas-powered units were installed for use in the gymnasium and kitchen, where a more immediate heating and cooling response is necessary. The ground source heat pump was built underneath the football field, which was covered with an artificial turf, which reduces the need for water. Maintenance reduction equates to lower air pollution from a riding lawn mower's two-stroke gas engine.

Casey Middle enrollment has increased to 600 students as more families have opted for their neighborhood school rather than choosing-out. This resurgence has helped to decrease vehicular traffic to other parts of town as students walk and ride their bikes the few blocks to school. Increased traffic was a concern for residents and a redesigned parking and drop-off area improves efficiency during high-traffic times, alleviating their fears.
