Use 'Blueprints' to discover key players in construction

By Christopher Wood and Jeff Nuttall
Business Report Co-publishers

Need an electrical contractor? Perhaps you have a building project and are in the market for a drywall. Or maybe you're desperately seeking an architect for a new home project.

No matter the construction-related need, Blueprints is one publication that can help.

This annual publication lists almost 2,000 construction-related companies in Northern Colorado, plus many construction-related articles and ranked lists from the pages of The Northern Colorado Business Report.

Like our other directories, including the Book of Lists, the Northern Colorado Technology/Manufacturers Directory, the Harvest Agribusiness Directory and the Northern Colorado MD medical directory, Blueprints includes valuable data such as address, phone, fax, e-mail, key contacts and more.

Blueprints provides this data for one of the most-important industries in Northern Colorado, one that employs thousands of people in architecture, engineering, construction and related sectors.

Listings in Blueprints are broken down by subcategory, including Architecture, General Contractors, Engineers, etc.

We are grateful to members of our staff whose efforts made Blueprints possible, including Nancy Glen, who led our sales efforts. Also indispensable were the research efforts of Researcher Eleanor Anderson and Chief Researcher Mishelle Baun, as well as the design skills of Production Manager Chad Collins and Graphic Designer Jim Schlichting, who prepared this year's cover.

McWhinneys reaching outside Centerra

Developer brothers focusing on new projects to the south

By Luanne Kadlub
Business Report Correspondent

LOVELAND — McWhinney Enterprises has become synonymous with Centerra, the 3,000-plus-acre mixed-use development at Interstate 25 and U.S. Highway 34. But by no means is it the only game in Northern Colorado for the home-grown developers of Troy and Chad McWhinney.

The McWhinneys are also developing Van de Water, a 300-acre parcel on the south side of U.S. 34, approximately one-half mile west of Centerra. It, too, will be a mix of commercial and residential but on a much smaller scale. "The commercial will be geared toward neighborhood commercial as opposed to regional commercial," said Nick Christensen, former vice president and chief operating officer of McWhinney Enterprises.

Christensen said the commercial portion of the project will be anchored either by a home improvement or grocery store along with stores typically found in a neighborhood.

The residential portion of the project includes a mix of single-family and attached housing. Two Northern Colorado homebuilders plan to put up 300 units each. Parkside Homes already has homes under construction, while RCI Construction plans to break ground on its homes in 2004. A majority of the single-family homes at Van de Water will be priced for the entry-level market, starting at under $200,000. Townhomes, condos and patio homes also will be offered in the mix.

No compromise on quality

But Christensen said affordable does not mean the homes will be substandard. "We're doing this with a real eye to quality. We're not going to compromise on quality. We're using a lot of attractive houses. They're not all beige boxes, and we're using stone, brick and a lot of landscaping." A neighborhood clubhouse also will be built, he said.

GOING OUT AND UP — A house goes up in the van de Water development southwest of the main Centerra development along U.S. Highway 34 in east Loveland. Van de Water, also owned by McWhinney Enterprises, is the first McWhinney project to break ground on the south side of Highway 34.

McWhinney Enterprises acquired the property in 2000 and the company has spent the last few years getting it annexed to Loveland and zoned. The property includes 30 acres dedicated for a middle school, though there are no plans at this time to build one.

Van de Water also will be similar to Centerra in its use of roundabouts, landscaped medians, parks and trails.

Wilson Ranch, an 1,800-acre parcel at I-25 and Colorado Highway 56, also will get the McWhinneys' golden touch. The property has been the subject of a court battle about on-again-off-again annexation into Berthoud's city limits. At issue was Berthoud's 5 percent growth cap, which was repealed last year.

"We could not develop it under the growth cap," said Troy McWhinney, principal of the McWhinney Property Group, a division of McWhinney Enterprises.

As it stands now, the McWhinneys have agreed to reannex the property to Berthoud in return for assurances that there won't be any kind of petitions that could imperil the development once it's under way, said Jim White, Berthoud town administrator.

Negotiations are continuing in good faith, he added, and continue on a regular basis with subcommittees meeting every week to review the overall development plan and ➡ annexation agreement.

"What we have sensed as a benefit is they have resources available to assist in the process to assure the quality of development will meet or exceed the standards we have, and we have rigorous standards," White said.

Signature project for Berthoud

Wilson Ranch is the largest development to come to Berthoud and sits at the community's eastern gateway. "There is no other way into Berthoud. We want it to be a signature landmark," White said. "That's why we're being very deliberate in negotiations. It's such an important project for Berthoud."

Wilson Ranch will be a mixed-used planned development, with commercial, retail, residential and an office park all part of the picture, much like Centerra. McWhinney said he anticipates the market will dictate the type of commercial that ultimately will go in.

Build-out is not expected for 50 to 60 years.

McWhinney said he doesn't expect Wilson Ranch to be competition for Centerra. "We intend for the two projects to complement one another," he said.

McWhinney Property Group also is working on a 180-lot subdivision south of Van de Water and is acting as owners' representatives for Poudre Valley Hospital's development of its 90-acre site at Harmony and Timberline. The hospital job includes master planning and titlement work.

But don't expect to see the McWhinneys' reach to become overextended in too many projects.

"We're going to be very selective with the projects we're working on," McWhinney said.

Log homes catching on in residential and commercial

Colorado is the state where most log homes are built

By Linda Masterson
Business Report Correspondent

More log homes are built in Colorado than anywhere else in North America. The state ranks No. 1 in sales volume, construction and number of builders and dealers. That stacks up to a $230 million growing industry for the state and a $2 billion industry nationwide.

"I've wanted a log home in Colorado since I got out of college," said Bob Morgan, who now lives with his wife, Heidi, in a handcrafted log home in Virginia Dale with a sweeping view of Fish Rock. "It took awhile, but we finally got here. It's my dream come true."

More options than ever

From log shells to do-it-yourself kits that typically provide log walls, roof systems, doors, windows, porches and dormers to turnkey construction that covers everything but the land itself, people yearning for log home living have more options today than ever.

Log homes come in two basic categories — machine milled and handcrafted. Milled logs are like modern-day Lincoln Logs, so the shell of a home can go up in as little as two or three days. Handcrafters still peel and trim each log the old-fashioned way. While handcrafted homes generally run 10 to 15 percent more, either type can be as modest or expansive as the homeowner's dreams and budget, with typical costs running between $150 and $200 a square foot.

Country Log Homes in Red Feather Lakes has been a distributor and builder for Idaho-based Lodge Logs since 1986. Lodge Logs specializes in Swedish Cope-style logs milled to fit together so tightly they need no chinking.

"These days people aren't building little vacation cabins. They want upscale homes with all the modern conveniences. An average two or three-bedroom home will run somewhere between $200,000 and $350,000 not counting the land, although they can go much higher, depending on amenities," said Country Log Homes owner Don Weixelman.

90 percent are primary homes

Twenty years ago, most log homes were built as second homes. Today, more than 90 percent of the half million modern log homes in North America are used as primary residences.

Weixelman said most people think building with logs is more expensive than it actually is. "The milled log technology we use means we're usually price competitive with a custom-built traditional home," he said.

When Karen and Mike Shutte moved from San Diego to Red Feather Lakes they chose Country Log Homes to build their dream home.

"We wanted to live in the mountains, and a log home seemed like the right choice. It harmonizes beautifully with the environment. With the expanses of glass and wood, you feel like there's no line between outside and inside," said Karen, an interior designer who enjoyed furnishing their 4,800-square-foot home with an eclectic mix of Southwest, Mission and Native American styles.

"It's kind of an old-fashioned family homestead, even though the house is very clean and contemporary. It's the perfect place to get all the kids and grandkids together."

Rocky Mountain Log Homes is one of the biggest producers in the country, building 300 to 500 homes a year. Rocky can turn out two homes a day at their huge plant in Montana, thanks to new robotic technology that's brought computerized precision to a very old art form. Ken and Kathy Hartberg in Loveland are their Northern Colorado distributors.

"We build about a home and a half a year," joked Ken. "That's because my partner and I do all the work ourselves. We could build more if I hired freelance crews like everyone else, but the only way I'm going to be 100 percent satisfied with the finished job is to do it myself. It's harder, but the results are worth it."

You might think handcrafters are a tiny segment of the industry, but one of the area's largest builders is premier handcrafter Log Knowledge, whose 5,000-square-foot model home on U.S. Highway 287 near LaPorte is an area landmark.

In business for 30 years, Log Knowledge employs up to 100 people in the field and at their seven-acre facility, where they work on up to three homes at a time as well as do piece work for commercial complexes that want to add the look of log without erecting a full log structure.

Growing commercial interest

In fact, thanks to a boom in commercial construction, over the past four years their business has grown more than 400 percent. Although they're still building between 25 and 35 homes a year, these days 70 percent of their business is commercial.

"Lately there's been a strong trend to what designers call 'parkitecture'," a style reminiscent of the great log lodges of the West," said Jon Fogelson, who's been in charge of sales and estimating for the past five years. Two good examples are the 15,000-square-foot contemporary log clubhouse at Pelican Lakes Golf Course in Windsor and the lodge-style Sylvan Dale Ranch west of Loveland.

Both builders and buyers agree that log homes, with their exposed beams, walls of glass, lavish use of wood, stone and other

Architects, builders using offices as design models

Lighting, climate control among features going from design office to work site

By Diane Freeman
Business Report Correspondent

Local builders and architects are taking the design features they have put into their own offices and are incorporating them into their client products.

Aspen Homes in Windsor recently moved into a new 5,000-square-foot building in Loveland that boasts many of the energy-saving aspects they include in their homes.

"We do single-family entry level homes and we're an energy-efficient builder," said Jammie Sabin, company president. "We're making this office a very energy-efficient building."

The new building at 29th and Taft in Loveland is designed for passive solar heating and tempering of the building.

"The floor in the front part will have thermal mass and two walls with columns of water that we fill up for thermal mass. In the winter, instead of having the sun come in and heat that room, the heat is transformed into thermal mass and gives off heat slowly," Sabin said.

He said the company worked with solar engineers to design the project that will decrease the heat load in winter.

"In the summer, it will soak up heat and dissipate it at night. The building won't change more than three to four degrees night or day year-round. It will moderate the temperature," he said.

This type of climate control has been available for several years but hasn't received much recognition, Sabin said.

"It will really help the comfort factor of the building," he said.

Cost savings

Initial costs are very affordable. "We're just doing what's efficient," he said.

The building has a 100,000-BTU furnace, less than half the size of a typical furnace for this size building. Instead of skylights, the building uses a solar tube — a small cylindrical skylight that has reflective materials all the way down. "It brings natural daylight into inner parts of the building. It doesn't have the weaknesses of skylights," he said.

Sabin said 38 people occupy the new $800,000 building.

Direct/indirect lighting is very much a trend in office design today, said Ken Field, a partner with RB+B Architects Inc. in Fort Collins.

"Our office is up-to-trend," he said. "There's an up light component in there, and it's reflected back down from the ceiling as a very soft, pleasant light and highly energetic."

Light fixtures in the company's office are suspended about two feet from the ceiling to bounce light up across the ceiling.

"Usually, there's a direct light component, too," Field said. "Daylighting is a big part of the trend. We're using daylight out there to help light the office. To do that, you have to be very intentional about it. It's not just putting windows in the office but reducing the glare and allowing a lot of light in high and deep into the office."

Field said this type of daylighting is done with special glazing and often uses exterior and even interior light reflectors.

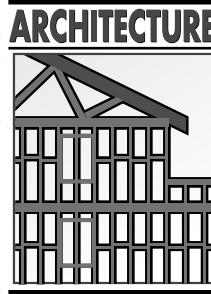

"You're using as much of the sunlight to light the office as you can," he said.

In the past, some designs did not even include windows in office spaces in order to be more energy efficient.

"Just in the last three to four years, this has become part of the whole green design movement," Field said.

Lighting trends keep changing

In the oil-bust days, architects kept windows small or out of a design completely to economize on energy costs, he said. "When energy was very expensive, windows were reduced," he said.

"We're just doing what's efficient."

— Jammie Sabin,
Aspen Homes president

Historically, it was thought that more light was better for an office, particularly artificial light. "Then, lighting standards gradually increased in the 1970s and '80s," he said.

"They said you need more and more light to see better. That trend has reduced. Now, quality is better than quantity so we're trying to reduce glare and contrast between light surfaces," he said.

"You can have too much light in your house if bright sunlight is coming in and there's a lot of glare," Field said.

Energy efficiency remains a definite part of office design, he said. "Our own office is a good example of the many kinds of lighting you can use in an office."

RB+B Architects has 19 employees and specializes in green architecture. Field said the practice is very broad but includes many school and office designs.

Another architect, David Lingle, partner with Aller-Lingle Architects in Fort Collins, said one new trend is in layouts for medical offices.

New federal regulations require greater privacy and confidentiality for patients, which can affect the design of a medical office, he said.

"They need more privacy when checking in so they're not overheard by other patients in the waiting room," Lingle said. "If a nurse has a patient's records up on a computer screen, it can't be seen by anyone else."

The new regulations went into effect in 2003. "You have to be aware of those kinds of things and take them into account when you do layouts for reception areas," he said.

Attached housing market appeals to variety of buyers

From 1998-2002, attached housing outpaced single-family

By Linda Masterson
Business Report Correspondent

According to Northern Colorado's No. 1 real estate agency, The Group, the attached housing market is booming. In fact, they report that between 1998 and 2002 the market for condos and townhomes in Larimer and Weld counties grew nearly five times as fast as the market for single-family homes.

During those years, the number of single-family homes sold in Northern Colorado increased a respectable 13.3 percent. But the number of condos and townhomes sold grew 65.3 percent.

One in five sales

In 2002 across the country, attached housing accounted for about 13 percent of all home sales. But in Northern Colorado, condos and townhomes accounted for nearly one out of every five sales.

And experts say there's no slowdown in sight. The condo/townhome market is growing strong because the affordability and lifestyle appeals to both ends of the market — singles and first-time buyers and empty nesters and retirees.

With Loveland/Fort Collins recently rated the No. 1 best place to reinvent your life by AARP Magazine and Weld County the second-fastest-growing county in Colorado, it's likely that the popularity of attached housing will continue to grow along with the population.

Sales picking up

Steve Baker, the employing broker at Sears Real Estate in Greeley, said last year his company had a lot of inventory but sales are picking up again.

"For $140,000, a buyer can have an entry-level single-family home in east Greeley, or south of Evans, or a brand new maintenance-free townhome with lots of neat amenities in west Greeley.

"It's exciting to see so many new projects going in with a lot of thought behind them," Baker said. "Wonderful amenities, green space, open floor plans — buyers get a lot for their money and don't have to sink a lot of money into landscaping and exterior improvements like you do if you buy a new single-family home."

STEVE PORTER • THE BUSINESS REPORT

POPULAR HOUSING CHOICE — Another townhome development takes shape at Rigden Farm in east Fort Collins. Townhomes, patio homes and other styles of attached housing are riding a wave of popularity among home buyers.

Gerry Crawford of Crawford Neal in Fort Collins said their listing inventory of townhomes is up but marketability and sales have been excellent.

"In my opinion, today in Fort Collins you get a better value-per-square-foot in a townhome than in a single-family home.

"It's a pleasure to see builders putting up really first-quality product," Crawford said. "There's no comparison to the slap 'em-up-and-move 'em-out attitude in California, where I came from. I can easily put someone in a nice condo between $110 (thousand) and $130 (thousand), or a townhome between $160 (thousand) and $210 (thousand), but I'd be hard pressed to deliver a single-family home in Fort Collins for under $240,000 because of the cost of the lot alone."

Market expanding

"It used to be that condo and townhome buyers were either retired, or brand new to the market. Now, we're getting a lot more singles and empty nesters — people who aren't ready to retire but are more than ready to hang up their snow shovels and lawnmowers and trade their big home for a maintenance-free lifestyle that gives them the time to enjoy themselves. If they want to travel, they just lock up and leave — nothing to worry about," Crawford said.

Crawford Neal client Bonnie DiCiaccio is typical of one of the fastest-growing buying groups in the nation — single women. The number of single women buying their own homes has more than doubled since 1987, and they now account for about 22 percent of home buyers nationwide.

DiCiaccio moved into her two-bedroom, two-and-a-half bath townhome in the Sailcrest development in Fort Collins in 2003 and said she loves it. Newly single after 25 years of marriage, DiCiaccio knew she wanted a place of her own for emotional and financial reasons. But she didn't want to take care of a single-family home.

"I feel safe here and I have exactly what I wanted — a big kitchen, a wonderful floor plan, and lots of amenities. Counting my ➔ unfinished basement, I have over 2,300 sq. ft. I have my own little yard and deck and a wonderful view," she said. "And I'm building equity."

Her HOA fee of $140 a month covers all exterior maintenance, plus water, trash, shoveling driveways and sidewalks, maintaining extensive greenbelts, and even staining her deck each spring.

Condos and lofts

Doug Dodds said the student housing market also provides a steady stream of buyers and sellers, with more and more parents today opting to take advantage of options like the FHA Kiddie Condo program. Instead of paying rent, they buy a condo where their son or daughter can live comfortably and safely while they're in school, then sell it when they graduate.

The Group's Scott Mullen said when the upscale Cortina opens in 2005 in the heart of downtown Fort Collins, the city will have its first urban loft development.

The Italian style Cortina features an underground parking garage with deeded spaces, two floors of office space, four floors with 20 luxury lofts, and three two-story penthouses. From the stone fireplace in the lobby to the red tile roof, the building offers all the luxuries typically found in a posh custom home. Prices start at $440,000 and top out at just under $1 million for the 3,000-square-foot-plus penthouses.

"In my opinion, today in Fort Collins you get a better value-per-square-foot in a townhome than in a single-family home."

Plenty of institutional construction ahead

New hospital facilities, university projects top construction list in 2004

By Steve Porter

The Business Report

Despite a less-than-stellar regional economy, several major institutional construction projects are slated for completion or projected to break ground in Northern Colorado in 2004 that together total nearly half a billion dollars.

The biggest of these is a new $220 million specialty hospital that Poudre Valley Health Services broke ground on in the mixed-use Centerra development in east Loveland on April 2.

The 125-bed hospital will focus on cardiology, cardiac surgery, neurosurgery and trauma care. The facility is scheduled to open in 2006.

Meanwhile, the region's other largest institutional projects are expansions of North Colorado Medical Center in Greeley — a $127 million expansion called the Second Century Project — and an $80 million expansion of McKee Medical Center in Loveland. Both facilities are managed by Banner Health Care System.

The Second Century Project will include a four-story hospital expansion and 700-space parking garage. Work on the project started this year and will continue through 2005, according to Gene Haffner, NCMC spokesman.

Site work is under way on the 123,000-square-foot McKee expansion that will add about 65 beds for obstetrics, telemetry and intensive care and expand McKee's surgery and laboratory units. The first phase is scheduled for completion by first quarter 2005 and the second phase — which includes a new emergency care facility — is expected to break ground before the end of 2004.

McKee is also partnering with four Loveland-area physician groups to build a $20 million, 70,000-to-80,000-square-foot medical office facility on U.S. Highway 34 east of the Metrolux theaters that should be complete by fall 2004. Joining with McKee in the project are Big Thompson Medical Group, Orthopaedic Center of the Rockies, Loveland Surgical Associates and Loveland Radiology Consultants.

MCKEE EXPANDING — Workers lay pipe and other infrastructure that will serve a new expansion to McKee Medical Center in Loveland. The 123,000-square-foot addition will include 65 new beds and expand the hospital's surgery and laboratory units. The first phase of the $80 million Legacy Project should be complete in early 2005. Alliance Construction Solutions of Loveland is the general contractor.

Not just medical facilities

But new and expanded hospitals aren't the only major institutional construction projects on the Northern Colorado landscape in 2004. Construction has begun on the fifth and final office building in the $80 million Natural Resources Center campus just south of Colorado State University in Fort Collins.

The $10.77 million, 43,500-square-foot building will house about 164 U.S. Forest Service scientists and administrators and is expected to be completed by September.

The structure, called "Building E," is being developed by Acquest Development of Buffalo, N.Y., which will lease the facility to the federal government.

On the nearby Colorado State University campus, several multi-million-dollar construction projects are under way or about to break ground.

CSU is converting the former Fort Collins High School one block east of South College Avenue into the University Center for the Arts. The $7.3 million project will add a new concert hall to the old high school, which was purchased by CSU.

The center's 550-seat concert hall opened on April 20. General contractor for the project is G.E. Johnson Construction in Greenwood Village.

The building will be home to CSU's Music, Theatre and Dance department, said Greg Smith, CSU's construction manager. ➡

Two new biosafety labs are planned for CSU's Foothills Campus in northwest Fort Collins. The labs, which will cost about $10 million and $24 million, are being funded by federal grants to CSU, Smith said.

"The federal money is based on the (post-9-11) culture we're in and the fact that CSU is nationally known for its research activities," he said.

R.C.Heath Construction of Fort Collins was awarded the bid on the $10 million facility, Smith said.

CSU is also planning to build a new, $19 million on-campus residence hall that's planned to be ready for occupancy by fall 2004. The four-story structure will house between 550 and 700 students and will eventually replace Ellis Hall and other aging residence halls.

And thanks to a $15 million donation from the Fort Collins-based Bohemian Fund, Hughes Stadium is getting a major facelift that will include a new practice field, enhanced box seating and expanded general seating.

Still building without state money

Smith said despite reduced funding from the state, CSU is still moving forward in its capital construction plans with other sources of funding.

"We're seeing a bit of a shift in our funding sources," he said. "When the state money went away, there was still the need and the (private) development money stepped forward."

The University of Northern Colorado is also using its own funds to build a new campus dining facility that broke ground in 2003 and will be completed in 2004. Fran Schoneck, UNC vice president for administration, said the $9 million facility should be ready to use by December 2004.

Construction activity by Larimer County — red-hot in recent years and capped off with the just-completed $60 million fairgrounds complex and new $15 million Larimer County Courthouse — is set to slow down in 2004.

Dave Spencer, facilities director, said the biggest project left on the county's plate is a $5 million community corrections project that's set for completion by second quarter 2004. Spencer said the county was hoping to build an expansion of the Alternative Sentencing Unit but a proposed 0.4 percent increase in the county's sales and use tax was turned down by voters in November.

"The need is still there, but because that's not funded we'll probably just take a little breather," Spencer said, noting that the county has spent about $183 million in construction and renovation projects over the last six years.

In Weld County, which also is slowing down after a fevered building program that included an $8 million jail remodeling, a $3 million law enforcement administration building and the $3 million Southwest Weld Services Building in Delcamino, only a couple of projects are planned for 2004.

Pat Persichino, director of general services, said Weld County will remodel the old downtown Greeley sheriff's office into new courtrooms — an estimated $1 million project — and will also demolish the former Weld County Garage building on Eighth Avenue in downtown Greeley and convert the site into a downtown parking lot.

best of the best in the nation.
But what really matters is that we do our best for you.

Five-star rating in treating heart attacks and peripheral vascular treatments that include angioplasty or stents.

Poudre Valley Hospital was recently honored with the 2004 Distinguished Hospital Award for Clinical Excellence, which puts us in the top 3.4% of hospitals nationwide. The award was given to us by HealthGrades, an independent healthcare quality reporting service.

But even as we receive national acclaim, we're not losing sight of the very local reason we strive for world-class healthcare. We do it for you and your family. We do it because we want you to have the best care possible.

For more information on the 2004 Distinguished Hospital Award, visit healthgrades.com.
