Blueprints changes format to meet changing times

A letter from Publisher Jeff Nuttall

Welcome to the Northern Colorado Business Report's annual Blueprints directory. Focused on the construction and remodeling industry, Blueprints strives to bring together information and relevant data about the businesses that make up the sector, which has traditionally been one of the most important drivers of the region's economy. As we all know, this driver has been navigating some bumpy roads in the past few years. While we are beginning to see some hopeful signs for the months ahead, please remember that the information contained in this issue is based on numbers for 2009. We are all looking forward to a more robust issue reflecting a more robust industry next year.

If you feel your company should have been listed in Blueprints, please use the form on page 39 to let us know. You may also e-mail our Chief Researcher Noelle Maesta at nmaesta@ncbr.com, or call our research department at 970-221-5400, ext. 213, for a survey form. You can also upload your company data online at www.ncbr.com; just click on submit data at the top of the homepage.

I'd like to take this opportunity to express my personal thanks and admiration to those companies, big and small, that have persevered through the current recession and continue to contribute to the local economy. Northern Colorado is in better shape than many other areas of the country right now, and it is due to the efforts of business people of vision who are hanging on in industries all across the spectrum. I look forward to continuing to do business with you all in the coming year, and in more prosperous times ahead.

Construction management grads not nailing job offers

Pre-graduation placement, recruitment efforts down

By Joshua Arnold, news@ncbr.com

FORT COLLINS — The 140 students graduating from Colorado State University's Construction Management program in May may not experience the immediate rewards of job placement enjoyed by those in previous years. That has more to do with the economy than the program, however.

According to the most recent employment report from the U.S. Department of Labor, the construction industry added only 15,000 jobs in March, but that was the first gain since June 2007. Construction unemployment is still high at 24.9 percent, but was down slightly from 27 percent in February.

Khristy Preston, associate coordinator of the Phelps Placement Office at Colorado State University said that it is definitely tougher than it was before for students to get jobs in today's economy.

"Before we would have, within three weeks, about 60 companies coming in and recruiting specifically for construction management students," she said. "Typically we would have 120 companies participating in recruiting events for both interns and graduating seniors; this semester we have had half that."

The program surveys its graduating seniors to help determine statistics on placement. "We typically would have almost 100 percent placement of students who were truly placeable in a position and wanted to work," Preston said.

However, recent data has been harder to come by, according to Phelps Placement Office Coordinator Anna Fontana.

"We only collected about half the surveys from the December graduates and of those maybe 60 percent were placed," she said, adding that Spring 2009 figures showed about half of the graduates had jobs. The office does not track layoffs.

Better-trained professionals

The construction management major has come a long way since its inception back in 1946, when the Department of Industrial Arts began a Light Construction and Marketing program in the Division of Engineering. The program was designed to provide the building industry with better-trained and better prepared professionals.

In 1959 the program was renamed Industrial Construction Management, and in 1987 shortened to just Construction Management. Today Construction Management has become its own department in the College of Applied Human Sciences.

The program's main purpose is to prepare students to work in the construction industry, with a strong understanding of the business side, according to Preston. In addition to coursework, every Construction Management student is required to do a six-month or minimum 1,000-hour internship. These internships help prepare them for what they will be doing when they graduate.

LOOKING — According to the Phelps Placement Office at Colorado State University, the number of companies at its latest recruiting event for interns and graduates was half of what it had in years past.

RK Mechanical Inc. of Denver has been able to provide many Construction Management internships, and the company currently has 30 CSU graduates on staff.

"Our interns come on board whether it's a six-month or three-month internship and we assign them to a project manager," said Jim Shaw, corporate recruiter for RK Mechanical. "They do the same work that they would do as if they were hired as a graduate. Their duties depend on much of the project's duration but we throw them right into the frying pan."

RK Mechanical is a full-service mechanical contracting company that provides plumbing, piping and sheet-metal fabrication and installation for projects around the world, according to its website.

Just as it is becoming harder for students who are graduating to secure job placement, it is just as hard for those trying to secure internships. Kyle Clanton, a third-year Construction Management major, has actively been searching for an internship but has yet to secure one.

"Even though I have not found an internship I know that many other members of this major are struggling to

Architecture Plus reinvents buildings — and itself

After four decades, firm still leader in reuse, sustainability

By Anne Cumming Rice, news@ncbr.com

When Jim Cox started Architecture Plus in 1970, Fort Collins was a city of about 50,000 with only a few architects. Most of the architecture projects in town were the construction of schools, a new city hall, the Lincoln Center and buildings at Colorado State University.

The city and architecture have changed a lot in 40 years.

Cox was a forerunner of sustainable buildings practices, a concept that was a difficult sell in Fort Collins when he first started touting it. Sustainability has since become the standard in architecture and construction.

As Architecture Plus celebrates its 40th anniversary this year, the recession, new technology and changes that have come with them have Cox and his staff on the brink of a different future.

"We have to constantly reposition and reinvent ourselves," Cox said.

doing a variety of projects for government entities — military bases, universities, states and school districts.

These are the same entities that now face budget cuts and are reluctant to build anything new. So the emphasis is on maintaining and remodeling existing buildings.

That's fine with Cox, who as an architectural research assistant at Texas A&M University in the 1960s first learned about sustainable building practices such as natural lighting and ventilation.

"The most sustainable thing you can do is reuse an existing building," Cox said.

For the past 10 to 15 years, as part of its interest in sustainability, Architecture Plus has focused most of its efforts on repurposing or renovating buildings.

"You are saving a tax on the environment," said Tom Kalert, a principal who joined the firm in 1994. "You're taking the old and making it relevant again for the next 30 years."

One of the firm's recent projects was a remodel and addition to the Bim Kendall House at the Haub School of

More NoCo homes built as Energy Stars

New LEED for Homes designation for higher performance houses

By Jessica Centers, news@ncbr.com

There is one LEED certified home in Fort Collins. Boulder has five and Denver has 11. That's compared to 2,353 homes that were Energy Star-qualified in Colorado last year — one third of all the homes built in the state in 2009, according to the Governor's Energy Office.

Why the disparity? Because it's a lot easier and less expensive to get the Energy Star rating, Northern Colorado green real estate experts explain.

Northern Colorado Energy Star Homes is part of the federal Energy Star program that began under the Environmental Protection Agency in 1992 as a voluntary labeling program for energy-efficient products like computers. Over the coming years, it expanded to include residential heating and cooling equipment, appliances and eventually new homes and commercial and industrial buildings.

Getting an Energy Star label on a new home is pretty much a no-brainer, according to Lara Williams, founder of the Green Team Real Estate.

"Energy Star is popular because it doesn't take much," she said. "You have to be at least 15 percent more efficient than a home built to code in 2004. A lot has evolved and changed since then."

An Energy Star rating, she explained, involves getting a high-efficiency furnace, good insulation and windows, and Energy Star appliances.

LEED for Homes, a product of the nonprofit U.S. Green Building Council, on the other hand, is for people who want to build high-performance green homes. It recognizes innovation, and looks at factors like water conservation, waste, indoor air quality and site selection in addition to energy efficiency.

"They're really fairly different," Williams said. "I don't come across them at all. It's a much higher hurdle to have a LEED home and a more expensive home, with more requirements to get that certification."

"It's just so new," added James W. Mitchell, a realtor at the Group Inc.'s Mulberry office and chair of the Fort Collins Board of Realtors' sustainability committee. "That's why we don't see too many of those."

For an Energy Star rating, you only have to have an energy rater come out to the house, but with LEED certification you have to pay for several third-party verification tests.

For new homes only

But while both Williams and Mitchell are in the business of selling green homes, they work primarily with resales rather than new construction — and neither certification program applies to existing homes.

In fact, there is no established green certification program for existing homes or remodels.

"Unfortunately, that's the case, even though the most green thing you can do is remodel rather than start from scratch," Williams said.

That's not to say there aren't resources out there for homeowners looking to do a green remodel, or simply reduce their energy consumption and utility bills. Williams points to ReGreen, a program developed by the USGBC and American Society of Interior Designers to provide green renovation tools and resources.

And even though there's not an Energy Star certification for existing homes, there's a wealth of resources for homeowners on the Energy Star website, explained David Talbot, project coordinator for Northern Colorado Energy Star Homes.

He said it would be difficult to apply Energy Star qualifications to existing homes without demolishing them — since a third-party energy rater inspects during the construction process.

But homeowners can still get an energy rater to come out and do an audit of their home — EnergyStar.gov has an energy auditor locator and some local utilities will provide a similar service. Auditors can visually inspect as well as conduct tests to find drafty areas around insulation, doors and windows.

He said the program is all about teaching homeowners how and where they can save money and be more efficient. At the same time, the national Energy Star program is working with lenders, realtors and appraisers to establish a tangible, quantifiable value

Take the 'con' out of construction

After four decades, firm still leader in reuse, sustainability

By Becky Jensen, news@ncbr.com

Warm weather has a way of bringing things to life. Grass is turning green, buds are popping, and talk of contractor fraud is in the air.

According to Barbara Read, director of communications at the Better Business Bureau serving Northern Colorado and Greater Wyoming, springtime is when most consumers get the itch to start tackling home improvement projects, and it's when the BBB notices a surge in online requests for information about remodeling and related businesses. In this economy, especially, more consumers are fixing up what they have instead of buying new.

Of the 25 most actively searched business categories on the BBB's Web site, 44 percent are associated with the home improvement and remodeling industry.

KRISTA WATZEL, NORTHERN COLORADO BUSINESS REPORT

CRAFTY GUYS — Dwight Sailer, left, and Bryan Soth, co-owners of HighCraft Builders in Fort Collins, have written a guide to help homeowners identify quality contractors from conmen. In addition, the duo launched handyman service HighCraft Home Services.

Of the total inquiries generated by the top 25 categories, 78 percent requested reports on such companies.

"This tells us that people are really looking for information before they hire a home contractor," Read said.

After they review reports, she encourages consumers to use the BBB's free online e-quote service to request bids from at least three BBB-accredited businesses.

Read maintains there are many reputable home improvement contractors in the area, but she says word of a few bad apples, combined with a tight economy, make consumers more cautious with their money. "When they hear contractor horror stories they don't want to be the next victim," she said.

Enter alleged bad apple and local handyman Richard Winger who currently sits in the Weld County Jail on fraud-related charges. Winger's January arrest is the type of story that fans the flames of buyer beware. Adding fuel to the fire is that this isn't Winger's first arrest for contractor fraud, and he's being held without bond for parole violation for "similar activities."

Fort Collins Police Detective Brien O'Malley, who is looking into Winger's activities in Larimer County, said contractor fraud is more cyclical than seasonal. When O'Malley first joined the financial crimes unit seven years ago, he dealt with a lot of check washing, which he claims is fairly non-existent now.

"It's investment fraud and contractor fraud these days," he said.

O'Malley is currently investigating

Winger for allegedly bilking Larimer County residents out of approximately $32,000 since June 2009 under the business names AAA Landscaping, Ditch Creek Contractors, AAA Hauling & Landscaping and AAA Property Services. Winger is alleged to have either collected cash in advance for services not delivered or to have hired subcontractors and failed to pay for services rendered. Winger advertised his services online on craigslist.org.

More reliable firms in region

So, do scam artists make it harder for legitimate home improvement contractors to get work? Not really, according to Dotti Weber, executive director of the Home Builders Association of Northern Colorado.

"We have far more reliable contractors than scam artists in Northern Colorado," she said, echoing the sentiments of Read at the BBB.

Weber's advice: If homeowners are not willing to check references and licenses they put themselves at risk. "Do your homework," she said. "You want to make sure you've got someone you trust in your home — someone who is going to do what they say they're going to do for the amount of money you're willing to pay them."

Bryan Soth couldn't agree more. Soth, As co-owner of HighCraft Builders based in Fort Collins, authored the consumer awareness guide, "What You Need to Know Before Hiring a Remodeling Contractor," with business partner Dwight Sailer.

The guide debunks common remodeling myths, helps identify good and bad contractors and offers sound advice and step-by-step tactics for "doing your homework" — right down to a detailed list of the questions homeowners should ask prospective contractors.

Like the BBB, the book says to be cautious of a contractor who sells services door-to-door, uses high-pressure sales tactics and who asks the homeowner to pull permits. Lack of a physical address and local phone listing may indicate a fly-by-night operation.

The BBB's Read warns that at this time of year, disreputable roofers and asphalt pavers drive through neighborhoods pitching unsolicited offers such as, "We have materials left over from a previous job, we can give you at a discount, and it looks like you need new shingles."

A professional contractor is established, shows proof of adequate insurance, is properly licensed by the city and/or county, offers detailed estimates and schedules in writing, and doesn't hesitate to share references. A good contractor is on time, clean, organized and often busy.

At minimum, consumers should ask friends or family for recommendations, obtain multiple bids and check the contractor's reputation with trusted third parties like the BBB or local trade associations.

Follow advice or pay the price

It's hard for him to admit, but Soth didn't follow his own advice when his wife hired Winger this time last year.

Soth didn't have time to do repairs on a rental property the couple owns. He contacted his favorite subcontractors, but they were all booked solid, and his friends and family had no additional names to offer. Soth encouraged his wife to explore other options, so she turned to craigslist, where she connected with Winger.

"I absolutely knew better, but I didn't want to take the time and energy to ask for references and credentials for such a small repair," Soth said.

They decided to skip their homework and gamble on the available handyman. Winger completed two small projects and the Soths were happy with the work. They were anxious to complete the remaining repairs so they hired him for a larger project.

Winger asked for a check upfront to cover materials. After receiving the money, Winger never came back and he stopped returning calls. Soth's voicemail promise to pursue small claims court finally spurred Winger to refund the money — which Soth acknowledges as a minor miracle.

The experience inspired Soth not only to swallow his pride and share his story to raise awareness about the darker side of his industry, but also to provide a solution. In January, Soth and Sailer launched a second business: HighCraft Home Services.

HighCraft Home Services handles quick-turn home improvement projects that include repairs, maintenance, energy assessments, efficiency retrofits and small-scale remodels. A team of trustworthy tradesmen does everything from fixing leaky faucets to replacing windows to building decks.

"Starting HighCraft Home Services is very personal to me," Soth said. "I want to make sure what happened to my family doesn't happen to others."

Soth's final advice? "Do your homework."

① AECOM merged with EDAA Inc. Nov. 2009

from ARCHITECTURE PLUS, 4C

Environment and Natural Resources at the University of Wyoming. Other renovation projects include residence and dining halls at CSU, buildings in Poudre School District, historic homes in Fort Collins and several projects for the state of Wyoming.

Architectural leader

In 1985, Architecture Plus designed the first commercial building in Colorado to use sustainable elements including natural lighting, ventilation, solar power and a pervious concrete parking lot that allows stormwater to absorb into the ground.

That building at 212 W. Mulberry St., originally occupied by Electrical Systems Consultants, was recently purchased by The Brendle Group, an engineering consulting firm that focuses on sustainability. Brendle plans to add to the building energy efficient upgrades and other renewable technologies.

Had LEED certification existed when the building was constructed, it would have earned a platinum rating, the highest level possible, Cox said.

A few years after that building was constructed, during the recession of the late 1980s, the firm started doing facility audits — assessing the mechanical, electrical and structural condition of buildings. Owners of large inventories of buildings, such as states and school districts, want the audits to determine how they can maintain existing buildings and what is a priority to repair.

Architecture Plus has done such audits all over the country and has become a nationwide expert and leader in doing them. Their competitors are in Boston and Seattle.

The audits also give government entities an unbiased cost analysis for building repair and upkeep, which has enabled some entities to go back and get bond issues approved that were previously rejected by voters.

The audits have become a living laboratory for Architecture Plus.

“Architecturally, we’ve seen good systems and bad ones, good materials and bad ones,” Cox said. “You definitely get a sense for what works and what doesn’t, and you can apply that to other projects.”

About 10 years ago, Architecture Plus did an audit of all state-owned buildings in Wyoming.

“They have thorough knowledge of how a building works,” said Ken Burnett, director of major maintenance for Wyoming’s School Facilities Commission. “Not only do they know how it works, they are great at relaying their thoughts and ideas. They’re excellent communicators.”

Communication and listening are keys to being a good architect, according to Architecture Plus’ Kalert.

“Architects tend to be problem solvers and people pleasers,” he said. “You could do the same building eight different times for eight different clients and you’d do it eight different ways. We have to be very conscious of service.”

Looking to the future

Locally, Architecture Plus has also done a variety of projects for the city of Fort Collins, Agilent Technologies, Kodak, Anheuser Busch and Hewlett Packard, among others.

“They’ve taken everything we’ve thrown at them and run with it,” said Ed Holder, construction manager for Poudre School District. “We like the fact that it’s a small firm and we can deal directly with the principals. That helps speed up the process, and we like to stay local, too.”

The firm’s most difficult project right now is a renovation of Wyoming State Hospital, which is both a mental hospital and a prison. The hard part is keeping the facility open while the renovation takes place and navigating all of the security issues that come with that, Cox said.

Cox was 31 years old when he started the firm, and the challenges of architecture keep him in the business 40 years later.

“No two projects are the same, whether it’s because of the building or the client,” he said. “You always have something new.”

And architecture is changing with the rest of the world. Cox wonders what schools and libraries will look like with the advent of the iPad and the Kindle. Those technological developments will have a direct impact on architecture.

“Do we really know what these buildings will look like in the future?” Cox asked. “I don’t think we do. Staying on top of these things is part of the challenge of being in architecture.”

find any sort of an internship," he said. "It is getting to the point where we are going to have to take unpaid internships, and relocate for three to six months with a company and receive no revenue for our time."

Industry still struggling

With the construction industry still struggling it has become hard for some companies to find the financing to offer paid internships to students. RK Mechanical has not been hit as hard as others by the economic downturn, and has not had to resort to unpaid internships. However, Shaw still recognizes some of the obstacles that may present themselves.

"If I have to make a decision between a full-time permanent employee and his career progression and offering someone an internship, I am going to weigh that in favor of keeping someone's livelihood," he said.

Clanton has realized that his troubles securing an internship could spell just as much difficulty, if not more, in securing a job.

"There will be plenty of people with equal qualifying credentials that are trying to get the same jobs," he said. "It is not going to be easy but my hopes are that the company I intern for will become the company I work for in the future."

The Phelps Placement Office at CSU works with students like Clanton to help them through times like these. They help with anything to do with placement, pre-employment, advising, counseling, mock interviews, critiquing, and more. They also help market graduating students' resumes on a CD to over 100 companies each year.

While recruitment of students from the Construction Management program at CSU is not at the levels of a few years ago, it is still a highly recruited program with plenty of industry support. Construction Management majors can only hope that the decreasing unemployment rate and first rise in payroll jobs in the industry in

The value of green homes

Until then, Williams says she'll keep working to market green houses — like her own recent remodel — in a way that makes buyers appreciate how different it is. "When I go to sell it, I'll have to promote that because we know the work we did."

She says it will likely come down to her as an agent showing off the new cork flooring and bamboo cabinets, as well as creating a features-and-benefits page that lists them for potential buyers and being upfront in the flyer: "Come see how this house is more energy efficient, has less environmental impact, is more sustainably updated..."

"Our major obstacle is to convey the value of the green-built home, regardless of the program you go for," Mitchell said. "There's a lot of education and raising awareness happening in our market."

He and Williams are both seeing the message start to take hold. It's hard to say no to a home that costs you less, has healthier air and a smaller environmental impact, Mitchell said.

"If we can convey that increased efficiency, increased saving on your energy bills, less expensive living, that's going to help," he said. "We're still having some obstacles to getting that information out there, but everybody is on board and looking toward a solution and both programs — Energy Star and LEED — are great. LEED is amazing because it's more encompassing. Energy Star is a great way to get a foot in the door and start being more efficient with resources. Every little bit counts, I think."

Toward that end, Mitchell also noted the Energy Star Mortgage Program through Bank of Colorado and the Governor's Energy Office that lets homebuyers or owners get reduced interest rates on a purchase or refinance when certain energy efficiency or renewable energy systems are included in the construction or renovation.

"The program's absolutely cool with no catch whatsoever," Mitchell said. "It allows buyers and sellers who refinance to make energy upgrades at no cost to them."
