A note to readers from the publisher

Construction is showing signs of a strong rebound, with residential building permits up 150 percent in the first two months of the year. Those are numbers that haven't been seen in years and they bode well for the year to come.

This year in Blueprints, the Northern Colorado Business Report recognizes the local builders, realtors, architects and engineers that have persevered and are poised to prevail this year.

You will find them here on our ranked lists and in the directory at the back of this publication.

Thanks to our Chief Researcher Mariah Gant for her work on this directory. If we have overlooked a company that should be included here, please send her an email (mgant@ncbr.com) with all the information and she will follow up to make sure our database is accurate and complete.

Thanks also to all of our Blueprints advertisers, and thanks especially to all our local construction, real estate, engineering and architecture firms that continue to find new ways to serve Northern Colorado.

Sincerely,

Jeff Nuttall

Building permits start the year up 150%

New buyers head to the country side

MOLLY ARMBRISTER
marmbrister@ncbr.com

Single-family building in Northern Colorado is up by more than 150 percent so far in 2013 when compared to the first two months of 2012.

Data from the U.S. Census Bureau show that in Larimer and Weld counties combined, the number of single-family permits has jumped from 271 in January and February of 2012 to 447 in the same months in 2013.

The two counties have issued almost equal numbers of permits so far in 2013, with 225 permits for new construction in Larimer County and 222 in Weld. At this time last year, Weld County had issued 164 permits, outpacing Larimer County's 107.

While some of the construction is going on in Northern Colorado's larger cities, records indicate that the smaller, outlying communities are seeing activity as well, especially in Weld County.

Baessler Homes is busy building in Ault, Eaton and Johnstown, according to Robbie Miner, a broker representing Baessler.

The reasons for building in smaller communities are two-fold for Baessler, Miner said.

One reason is a loan program with the U.S. Department of Agriculture that provides loans that don't require a down payment for a home in a rural community. The USDA has two different programs that offer home loans with no down payments for qualifying borrowers, according to information provided by Cheryl Scofield, northeast area director for rural development for the department.

Beyond that, building homes in Northern Colorado's rural communities allows builders to construct more affordable homes than building in a city, Miner said. Land prices and average home costs are lower in smaller communities.

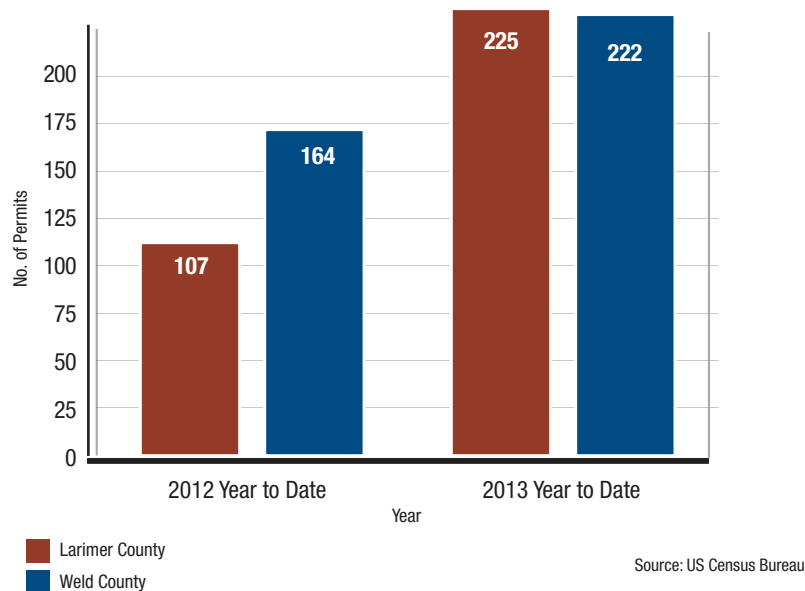

Recent increases in home prices have made affordable homes even more desirable than usual, Miner said, and outlying areas often have lots at more affordable rates. A shortage of affordable lots has been developing for several months and will persist into the traditionally building-heavy summer months of 2013.

Many local builders saw this shortage coming and stockpiled lots when they could, Miner said. Baessler, for example has enough lot inventory to last two to three years, according to Miner.

Immediately following the end of the recession, which officially occurred in 2010, according to the Single-family building permits

The number of permits issued in Larimer and Weld counties has increased by more than 150 percent in the first two months of 2013 when compared to the January and February of 2012.

Federal Reserve Bank of Kansas City, many builders were able to purchase lots for very low prices because of foreclosures and short sales.

Those low lot prices narrowed the gap between the cost of new and existing homes with similar assets, Miner said.

Miner said that in his experience, "new construction has never been priced so close to existing." The gap will likely widen again once builders use up the lots they have and begin having to purchase pricier plots again.

Baessler is also able to build homes on sizable pieces of land and keep the price on the lower end in rural areas.

In Ault, for example, a buyer could purchase a home on one or two acres of land for about $210,000. That purchase price is lower than the median price for a home within the city limits of either Fort Collins or Loveland without acreage attached.

In addition to the construction underway in the region's smaller communities, Baessler also has about 20 homes under construction in Greeley right now, Miner said. The company only builds pre-sold homes, but does have one model home in the St. Michael's Square neighborhood.

Baessler's total will be about 50 percent larger than last year, according to Miner. In all of 2012, the company completed 60 homes. This year, it is on pace to complete 90 homes.

Park Place Homes is also busy in the St. Michael's area of Greeley, as well as in Evans and Eaton, according to Lindsey Bustamante, a broker representing Park Place. The company is on pace to potentially double its 2012 construction.

Park Place's homes start at $190,000.

Last year, Park Place completed and sold 16 homes and was "thrilled," according to Bustamante. This year, the builder is on pace to complete between 25 and 30 homes.

Bustamante said that part of the motivation for building in a town like Eaton is as simple as the feeling of the community.

Those in charge at Park Place are attracted to “feel good” communities, Bustamante said. Eaton is seen as a good small town to have a family that is in close proximity to employment in larger cities.

The company usually keeps at least one speculative home under construction at all times, Bustamante said, which allows for potential buyers to look at a real home, rather than just blueprints.

Those speculative homes usually end up selling toward the end of the construction process, according to Bustamante.

Bucking the status quo

New urbanism meets farm-to-cul-de-sac in eastern Fort Collins

BY STEVE LYNN

slynn@ncbr.com

FORT COLLINS – At the Bucking Horse, a new residential development rising from the remains of the old Jessup Farm in eastern Fort Collins, healthy living is going to a whole new level, and that's precisely what developer and Fort Collins city councilman Gino Campana says he intends.

Fruit and vegetable trees will dot the property, along with a pumpkin patch, trails and bike paths. A farm-to-fork restaurant's menu will draw from livestock and crops raised nearby. For Thanksgiving, residents can order a turkey raised in the development's farm.

JONATHAN CASTNER

"The idea is to make a reconnection between our living and the food we consume," he said. "So we're doing that throughout our entire project: promoting exercise, promoting eating right."

The development encompasses 300 acres northeast of Timberline and Drake roads. Crews are building on 160 acres of the project, while the other acreage includes the adjacent Side Hill, a neighborhood that will be merged into Bucking Horse.

Joseph and Mary Jessup established the farm in the 1880s. Bellisimo, the development company that is building Bucking Horse plans to preserve the farm's historic red brick homes, barn, storage shed and chicken coop. Old farm equipment will be displayed throughout the new development.

Campana, president of Bellisimo, a lifelong Fort Collins resident and newly elected city councilman, has developed multiple projects in Northern Colorado, including various shopping centers and office parks. He built Bucking Horse to buck the status quo, he said.

The development will stand in contrast to the average Northern Colorado neighborhood by promoting community involvement with daily activities such as movie nights, fire-pit gatherings and classes.

While unique in scope, the idea is nothing new. The concept comes from New Urbanism, a movement that combines dense housing, pedestrian friendly areas, retail and service businesses, open spaces and art displays.

Bucking Horse espouses some of those principles, including farming, once an essential part of the urban environment until it largely vanished after the 1920s, said Korkut Onaran, a CU Denver assistant professor adjunct and president of Congress for New Urbanism's Colorado chapter.

"I think growing food has a much better community-building function and potential than, let's say, just a golf course," said Onaran, founder of Pel-Ona Architects & Urbanists. "Around sharing and growing food, people come together in a much different way, and that creates community."

The movement has gained popularity from the urban agriculture programs of organizations such as Denver Urban Gardens and Produce Denver, he said. The groups help people grow gardens in their yards.

The idea may have its limits. Some people, for example, have told Campana he might have gone too far by including a pumpkin patch that unruly teenagers could exploit to smatter streets and houses with pulp.

Campana remains optimistic, believing the community will take care of its own.

"We believe with it being a part of the neighborhood and community, you act as your own watchdog," he said. "There's going to be a sense of pride around that."

Bucking Horse will contain more than 1,000 homes, including 205 single-family homes, 78 townhomes and 330 apartments and condominiums. Bellisimo still needs to submit a final development plan to the city of Fort Collins for the apartments.

► See Jessup, 5B

JESSUP from 4B

The healthy-lifestyle concept isn't cheap, and neither are the homes. Campana says he expects them to range from $300,000 to $500,000, or "20 to 25 percent" higher than other neighborhoods.

Bellissimo will complete construction on everything but the apartments in the next two years, Campana said. The apartments will be completed within three years.

The new homes will add to already robust single-family home construction activity. Permits for more than 140 single-family homes were issued in Fort Collins through March this year, up from fewer than 80 permits issued during the same period last year, according to the city.

Ray Browning, an assistant professor in CSU's Department of Health and Exercise Science, worked with Bellissimo on how to engage children, as well as parents, at Bucking Horse playgrounds.

Children tend to lose interest in playgrounds, so Browning suggested that Bucking Horse regularly add new elements. He also told Bellissimo it should install exercise equipment for adults who normally would simply watch their kids play.

Browning, for his part, would like to study what kinds of playground features keep Bucking Horse residents active, he said.

The development also will include an artisan village with a winery, coffee shop, bakery, microbrewery, distillery and restaurants. At the Jessup Farm, crops will be raised not only for the farm-to-fork restaurant, but for local schools. The property also will have a farm with livestock where residents, including children, can work.

JONATHAN CASTNER

Developer Gino Campana hopes to meld the culture of farming with suburbia at his new development - Bucking Horse.

"There's no better educational piece than for a child to see that egg turn into a chicken and that chicken turn into a meal," said Campana.

That could take some adjustment on the part of families.

Bucking Horse employees will have to make tough decisions when children become attached to animals before they are harvested, said Robert J. Callan, a CSU professor and Large Animal Hospital chief of staff. But like Campana, Callan believes it can offer a great lesson for children.

Callan helped Bellissimo with the working farm, offering suggestions on how to maintain animal welfare as well as reduce the risk of transmitting disease from animals to people by using proper drainage.

Callan believes Bucking Horse can run the working farm safely. He points out the success of the Farm at Lee Martinez Park in Fort Collins.

"There's plenty of examples, I'm sure, both in Colorado and across the country of small farms like this that have wider public access," he said. "But we do have to be careful, and that's not to say that we can eliminate all risk."

Risk aside, Callan likes the idea of the project because it teaches people where their food comes from.

He envisions a scenario where parents could tell their children: "It's Friday evening; it's your day where you go out and clean the stall at the farm," he said. "While you do that, get to know the animals."

Not enough people know where their food comes from and Bucking Horse seems like a step in the right direction, said Trinity Bigford, deli catering manager at the Fort Collins Food Co-op.

"It would be great to see more of these developments that are going in that direction," she said.

New art center and tech building on tap

Front Range renovation reflects state-wide trend

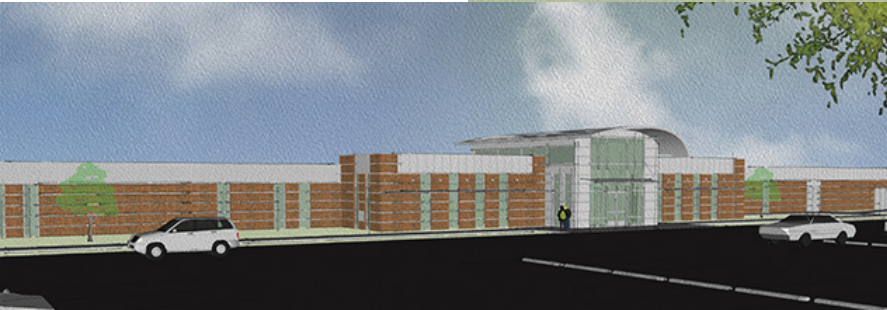

MAGGIE SHAFER

After four years of unprecedented growth, Front Range Community College will begin a $24 million renovation in Fort Collins, which will include a new art center and integrated technology building to house the school's fastest-growing programs and nearly 10,000 students.

The construction projects are a result of a master-planning process that determined the campus needed another 90,000-square-feet in classroom and study space, and a major technology update. The remodel will add 63,000 square feet, and is the school's first major renovation of several buildings since they were originally constructed in the 1970s – long overdue, according to FRCC Vice President Bruce Walthers.

"We have grown so quickly over the past five to seven years, and our growth is reflective of industry needs," he said. "The construction is really addressing our current need, not predicted future growth."

The remodel, paid for by $15 million in student fees and $9 million from the school's budget, was designed by OZ Architecture and will be tackled in five phases over the next three years by Adolphson & Peterson Construction.

The integrated technology building, the first slated for construction, will house the school's fastest growing programs: welding, automotive technology and clean-energy technology.

It will feature a dedicated fabrication space for welding, more auto bays, lab spaces, lounge areas and a tech facelift. “We can’t even turn out enough grads to meet the demand in welding right now,” said Walthers.

Phase two will include the Redcloud Peak building, which will be renovated to incorporate more space for art, music, dance, theater, natural resources and horticulture. The expanded space will include a Consolidated Arts Complex including a design center, an expansion in space for computer-aided design, multimedia graphic design, interior design and architecture, as well as a Black Box Theater and an outdoor arts courtyard.

Next on the list is the administrative building, Mount Antero, which will be redesigned into a central student lounge, study space and student services area. The building will house student organizations, the Learning Opportunity Center, tutoring and other academic support services.

Maroon Peak, the veterinary technology building, and Blanca Peak, which houses nursing, business and social behavioral sciences, will also undergo renovations.

All renovations will match the style of existing buildings, including the horizontal masonry, said David Schaffer, the architect who worked on the project. More skylights, better insulation and other energy-saving measures will also be incorporated.

Mount Antero, the administrative building, will be redesigned to include a central study lounge.

More than 84 percent of the 712 students who voted approved the stepped fee increase – $3 per credit hour in fall 2013, $5 in fall 2014 and $7 in fall 2015, where it will remain for the life of the bond, approximately 20 years. The fee will not be applied to credit hours over 12 – a full-time load.

The first project is scheduled to be completed by the end of 2013.

The 12-month process that identified the space deficiencies included faculty, staff and student input. Since the last master-plan was completed in 2007, the school has grown by more than 25 percent, from 7,594 to 9,786 students.

FRCC’s enrollment boom reflects a statewide trend, as more and more prospective students find traditional four-year institutions increasingly unaffordable. Colorado community colleges added 41,000 students in the last five years, according to Colorado Community College System President Nancy McCallin.

She attributed some of the growth to recession-era workers returning to school for retraining, as well as the changing value of a two-year degree.

On average, one year after graduation, students with an associates of applied science degree earn almost $7,000 more than graduates of four-year bachelor’s degree programs across Colorado, according to a study released in March by College Measures.

Community College of Denver and Pueblo Community College are also utilizing the influx of tuition-paying students to renovate. The most common reason: the schools’ technology has grown obsolete.

“Technology 20 years ago was not used a whole lot in education, but it is integral today,” said McCallin. “We’ve seen a lot of projects approved in order to modernize, and teach in an environment that the students can learn in and have come to expect. We need to provide that in the college setting.”

Mulberry bridge to get $12 million upgrade

BY MOLLY ARMBRISTER
marmbrister@ncbr.com

The Colorado Department of Transportation will spend $12 million in the coming months to raise a bridge near Mulberry Street and Lemay Avenue to accommodate floodplain clearances.

The bridge will also be widened to include a bike lane and sidewalks.

The work is part of CDOT's Bridge Enterprise Project, which every year funds the improvements of bridges across the state.

The work will take place on Mulberry Street between Lemay and Riverside avenues where Mulberry crosses the Poudre River. The bridge is about one-third of a mile long, according to Rich Christy, CDOT project manager for the bridge upgrade.

The bridge was first built in 1949 and has been deemed "structurally deficient," according to Christy.

The work will be completed in two stages, Christy said, with crews doing the majority of the work during the winter months while the river is low. The project will begin in the fall of 2013 and continue for 18 months.

Traffic will be impacted during construction, but CDOT worked closely with the City of Fort Collins to come up with the least-disruptive solution. The westbound lanes of Mulberry will remain open, Christy said, but the eastbound lanes will have to be closed.

While the bulk of the money and labor for the project will be CDOT's responsibility, the City of Fort Collins will also play a small role in the bridge's upgrade.

In the 2013-2014 budget, the city appropriated $750,000 over two years for "urban design and landscaping enhancements." The city is still working to decide exactly what those enhancements might entail, according to Rick Richter, director of infrastructure services for the city.

Richter said that elements like landscaping, art or upgraded rails are some of the options that may be included.

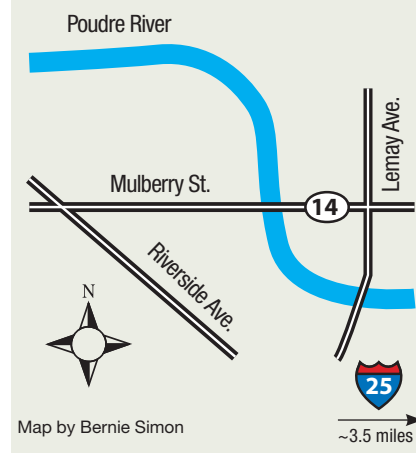

This would not be the first time that the City of Fort Collins partnered with CDOT to enhance an infrastructure project.

The same kind of arrangement, along with the Town of Windsor, is what led to the brickwork used on the newly-renovated Highway 392 interchange in Windsor, according to Christy.

Adding these elements can help make infrastructure improvements function as gateways, Christy said. The location of the Mulberry bridge project suggests that any additional features the city uses for the bridge would turn it into a gateway to the downtown area.

That particular part of town may be seeing an increase in traffic in the not-so-distant future. The project is located just down Lemay Avenue from the Link-N-Greens golf course, the site where Woodward Inc. has proposed building a new headquarters and other commercial buildings.

Euro-design arrives in college neighborhood

Campus Flats offers flex spaces, hot tubs

BY EMILY CLINGMAN
news@ncbr.com

When it comes to getting your own pad in a college town, the stakes have been raised in Fort Collins—to a penthouse apartment with a rooftop hot tub overlooking campus.

Campus Flats @ Ram's Crossing, a new apartment complex at 908 West Lake Street is launching the concept of Europads: luxury flexible living spaces with all the amenities.

"It's sort of a play on words," said Ram's Crossing owner, Charles Gower. "Your own pad, your space, your lifestyle."

Inspired by European small-space living, Gower and his wife, Cheryl DiPanfilo, came up with the idea for the 36-unit complex slated to open May 15. It offers flats, two bedrooms and 1,050 square foot, three-bedroom penthouse lofts that include spiral staircases, one and a half baths, vaulted ceilings and double decks.

"YOU CAN SWITCH THE LIVING ROOM TO THE BEDROOM IF YOU WANT TO, IT'S YOUR OWN PAD."

Cheryl DiPanfilo

Aside from the rooftop hot tubs, which "you won't find anywhere else in town" according to DiPanfilo, the unique floor plans set this property apart from traditional apartment layouts. They're missing walls.

"Without walls, it feels bigger," DiPanfilo said about the new apartments.

With the open floor plan, tenants can define separate spaces by hanging fabric curtains, screen divisions or strategic furniture placement. There are no closets in the flex wall areas, but there is one walk-in closet near the entry, which also boasts a full size washer and dryer.

"You can switch the living room to the bedroom if you want to," DiPanfilo said. "It's your own pad."

Each flat comes with a private deck. Some have views of the community pool and the mountains to the west and others overlook CSU's arboretum to the east. DiPanfilo is confident that should there be a new football stadium on campus in the future, residents with rooftop decks will be able to watch home games.

EMILY CLINGMAN

Movable walls give renters lots of options in these 'flex pads' a 908 West Lake Street in Fort Collins.

Emily Allen, community liaison for Off-Campus Life at CSU said that the trend for high-end apartments isn't necessarily student driven.

"It's more a need for housing options within the Fort Collins community," she said. "With the vacancy rate as low as it has been in recent years, there has been an increase in demand in the rental market place."

Allen said new facilities are being built that offer amenities that are standard with current building practices. When asked how students are able to afford these kinds of apartments she said the assumption would be that they are paying for these apartments the same way they always have been: working while in college, or with help from family, friends or financial aid.

"The new apartment complexes that are being built, are just that, new," Allen said. "As with everything in our society, new is exciting and fresh and will draw people in; only time will let us know what our students think of the latest offerings in off-campus living."

The draftsman behind these apartment designs is Matt Rankin owner of r4 Architects, a local company that specializes in private commercial development such as student housing, medical and surgery centers.

Units range from $1150 to $2550. They come with hardwood floors, elegant light fixtures and custom bathroom tile imported from Europe.

Pricing comparisons put Campus Flats in a similar range as two other privately owned complexes that have been recently built on Laurel Street—adjacent to campus. They are considered luxury apartments that offer similar amenities, though their rates top out at about $1,900, not including the hot tubs.

Campus Flats represent a pretty big stretch from typical dormitory style living in college. While they are open for anyone to rent, they are geared toward students who want the indulgences and privacy they've been used to at home.

Universities around the country are ramping up their dormitory renovations as a recruiting tool to attract new students. Private developers like Rams Crossing in Fort Collins are jumping in on the trend while it's hot. Nationwide, student housing totaling more than 30,000 beds is estimated to be under construction around campuses according to a December report by the Wall Street Journal.

Jo Stoeber, community manager for Ram's Crossing said that Colorado State has made tremendous progress in renovating existing spaces to make them more high-end and appealing and have constructed several new facilities on campus.

"However, the public university system in Colorado is underfunded and cannot afford to be in the real estate development business," she said.

Even though its long term goal is to keep more students on campus longer and to create more desirable study/living environments, the pri-ivate development option is much more cost effective said Stoeber. She said Ram's Crossing is in constant communication with the University and is trying its best to fill the current student-housing deficit.

Savvy young realtors “tweet” with the best

Social media keeps deal connections live

BY DAN COOK
news@ncbr.com

Pinterest was launched in 2010 as a cloud-based space to store and share users' favorite photos. But it had barely been birthed before clever realtors figured out that they could use its search-engine capabilities to sell homes.

“People who are on Pinterest are pinning things that interest them. If people follow you or you follow them and find out about their dream home, it's a great way to find clients,” says Heidi Margolis, team leader with Coldwell Banker Residential Brokerage (formerly Keller Williams). “You can search by houses, mountain properties, rustic homes; that's the newest phenomenon when it comes to technology.”

Pinterest is just one of the new technologies that is changing the way real estate firms do business in Northern Colorado. Today, few agents will head out to meet a client without their GPS-empowered smart phone, connected to the multiple listing service, at the ready. This allows their clients to see all the comps and homes for sale in the neighborhood they're looking in.

WHILE SOCIAL MEDIA SKILLS ARE AN ASSET TO A JOB CANDIDATE, THE BASIC QUALITIES REAL ESTATE COMPANY MANAGERS LOOK FOR IN THE “NEW BREED” AREN'T MUCH DIFFERENT FROM WHAT THEY SOUGHT IN THE PAST. KENDALL AND MARGOLIS BOTH WANT TO SEE A HISTORY OF HARD WORK, FOLLOW-THROUGH AND GOOD WORK HABITS.

But the degree to which agents deploy social media and technology to identify prospects and close deals does, in general, depend upon the age of the agent, sources agree. Young, savvy realtors entering the business use Facebook, Twitter, LinkedIn, Pinterest, Instagram and other sites to prospect, connect with good clients and announce successful transactions.

Larry Kendall, co-founder and chairman emeritus of The Group and author of Ninja Selling, teaches real estate sales techniques at his Ninja Selling workshops. He acknowledges that technology has transformed pieces of the business. Deals are now closed remotely via electronic signatures imprinted on electronic documents. Even laptop computers have been replaced by lighter, more versatile iPads. Yes, the new sales person is much more mobile and able to quickly share information with clients that once took hours or even days to gather.

Still, with a few exceptions, technology cannot turn a mediocre sales agent into the office leader.

“To be a master of this business, you need to know a lot of things, and technology is just one of them,” Kendall said. “There's the whole financing side. The whole legal side. The housing design side. The environmental side. And you need to be a bit of a psychologist, too. But the main ingredient for success is this: You've gotta wanna do it.”

In the era of social media, where trust is paramount, the realtor-client relationship has become more important than ever. This is why Kendall counsels his students to use such platforms as Facebook and Twitter to nurture relationships, but not to rely upon them to close deals. “We notice that the most successful sales people use technology properly. You can get leads and ideas from Facebook, but we tell them not to spend more than two or three hours a week on Facebook. They should be connecting more personally with clients rather than staring at a computer screen,” he says.

One typical “Ninja” recommendation: Watch for significant life events on someone's Facebook account--say, a birthday, promotion at work, divorce--but instead of responding to the person through Facebook, call them on the phone or send a personal email or written note.

“That deeper level of connection often leads to a business transaction,” Kendall said.

Maegan Dugger was The Group's “Rookie of the Year” in 2012, her first full sales season. She closed 19 transactions; the national average is about six per realtor per year. For Duggar, social media is “mostly for clients to get to know me on a personal level. I don’t get on my Facebook or Instagram accounts and blast out stuff about real estate. My clients are on there but it’s personal information, not business. I use it to be able to connect more deeply on a relationship basis. That’s where my business comes from: keeping in touch with people, staying connected.”

Duggar gets involved community service activities and makes sure she’s out and about, meeting people, building relationships that some day may lead to a sale. For her social media is just another opportunity to build on a relationship.

While social media skills are an asset to a job candidate, the basic qualities real estate company managers look for in the “new breed” aren’t much different from what they sought in the past. Kendall and Margolis both want to see a history of hard work, follow-through and good work habits. They want people with a long-term commitment to the industry. They’re looking for integrity and character, a person “who you can give the keys to your home to and tell them, ‘Go ahead and look around,’” Kendall said.

Margolis says the “new breed” entering the business is serious about real estate as a career and pays close attention to the business side. They have no fear of technology; the only downside may be to overestimate technology’s role in selling property.

“We tell our agents that you have to be fulltime and lead generate every day,” she says. “The breed coming in know they have to work hard to make a living and they are willing to make that commitment. Our job is teaching them the right skills. I ask my agents, ‘How many calls are you going to make this week and how many leads will you generate?’ It’s really all about lead generation, however you want to generate those leads.” Kendall says the housing meltdown was a wake-up call to newcomers to the industry who thought a real estate license was a license to print money.

“It looks like an easy business, especially now that rates are low, inventory is low and demand for homes is high,” Kendall says. “But I say it’s a very hard easy business. What you need to learn to do is pretty easy; we can teach it in our workshops. The hard part is waking up every day knowing that you are unemployed, and going out and trying to sell a home.”

2013 CFO of the Year Nomination

Nomination deadline: August 1, 2013

The Northern Colorado CFO Awards are presented to recognize chief financial officers in the Northern Colorado region whose efforts successfully guide a company's financial future.

Candidates for the Northern Colorado CFO Awards must meet the following three criteria:

1. Candidates for the Northern Colorado CFO Awards are the individuals responsible for the financial management of their companies. They may or may not carry the title of chief financial officer, but they carry the responsibilities of that office.
2. Candidates must work in Northern Colorado (Larimer and Weld counties).
3. The company for which the candidate works must be headquartered in Northern Colorado.

Award Categories:

The Northern Colorado CFO Awards will be presented to CFOs in the primary three industry segments below. The private sector, for-profit segment has three categories ranked by employee base. Private sector not-for-profit organizations are divided into two categories based on focus. The final segment is for all governmental and public education entities. The final two awards are for specific accomplishments.

PRIVATE SECTOR

For-profit companies

- 1 - 49 Employees
- 50 - 99 Employees
- 100 plus Employees

Not-for-profit companies

- Human services
- Creative industries

PUBLIC SECTOR

This category includes all governments, public agencies and public schools.

DISTINCTIVE ACCOMPLISHMENTS

- Growth Leader - This category includes those CFOs who have been at the financial forefront of companies that have significantly increased revenues and/or profits.
- Lifetime Achievement - This category includes those CFOs who have demonstrated significant achievements over a career spanning a minimum of 25 years.

Candidates for the Northern Colorado CFO Awards must demonstrate achievements in the following two areas:

- Advancing and contributing to the success of the company for which he or she works.
- Community involvement and leadership.

Please describe this candidate's achievements in these two areas in a narrative of not more than 200 words.
