Baby-boomer road trips

TIPS FOR HITTING THE ROAD AFTER RETIREMENT

BY ELIZABETH GOLD

news@bizwestmedia.com

No other generation has been put under the microscope and analyzed more than the baby boomers. They're such a large group that marketing companies have had field days researching what drives them, what they want to buy and what they think.

And true to form, how boomers like to get away supports the characteristics that have come to define them.

According to a recent AARP study, when they go on vacations, the generation likes to spread their free-spirit wings and focus on relaxation and rejuvenation, spend time with family and friends and get away from everyday normal life.

Experiencing something new and interesting tends to filter into most everything that attracts boomers, and how they travel is no different.

Sue and Scott Allman live in Boulder and aim to take a trip every five or six weeks. Sue teaches clay sculpting and is a ceramic artist, and Scott is a software engineer consultant. Although they fall in the baby-boomer age category of just-about-able-to-retire, neither has plans to do so.

"We're both very engaged in our work," Sue said.

To make the time and space for travel, she rearranges her teaching schedule to leave days open, and Scott plans in advance as well.

"As a consultant, if I'm not working, I'm not getting paid, but as long as I get in so many hours a week or a month, my client is happy when the project is done," he said. "What I do is work longer weeks before a trip and make sure to not short change my clients or my income."

Because they camp and backpack, planning is necessary. Getting a wilderness permit to backpack in national parks, for example, can require months of lead time.

"It's a double-edged sword, though, because it commits us to going. Plus, I've already notified my teams, and Sue has notified her students."

They use Google maps and other people's blogs as an inspiration when considering where to head next. From there, the trips take on a life of their own.

"There's something magical about being on a road trip," Scott said. We don't sign up for a cruise where people take care of us — we hop in our car and make it up as we go."

The Allman's revamped their Prius to make camping a more comfortable option when needed. By replacing the backseat with a piece of plywood and a mattress, they've created a homegrown deluxe camper.

And when they feel the need for a shower, they pay a visit to a local community recreation center.

"Backpacking inspires us to get in better shape," Sue said. "Travel in general keeps us more engaged in our lives."

"And America seems much friendlier in a campground than on the nightly news," Scott added. "One of the best parts is the adventure of being somewhere new and getting a little nudge in self confidence afterwards saying 'hey, we just did it again.'"

Debbie and Jim McNerney recently stepped up their camping experience with a month-long trip to choice spots across the United States with an RV camper.

To make it happen, Debbie, a former Colorado resident who's now laid down roots in Florida, retired. Jim had taken the plunge two and one-half years earlier.

Preparation for the road trip started with the purchase of a 2001 Class C RV with 48,000 miles on it from Craigslist. The vehicle cost $15,000.

The McNerney's took the camper on trial trips around Florida and then to North Carolina, staying in state parks along the way. The only addition they made afterwards was to replace the mattress.

They put 10,000 miles on the camper in the extended one-month trek and hit their expected budget of $4,000 to $5,000 to make the trip.

Since they planned to be driving a lot, Debbie and Jim downloaded audio books for entertainment and phone apps to make finding places to stay easier.

Allstays helped them find campgrounds, RV parks and related services, and the Ultimate Public Campgrounds app gave information about publicly owned, non-commercial campgrounds.

A $10 senior pass (good for a lifetime for U.S. citizens 62 and older) got them into national parks for free, with a 50 percent discount on camping.

"The app finds your location by GPS and lets you know where all the campgrounds around you are," Debbie said. "It would have been a detriment to have reservations because that would require a schedule, and we didn't want that.

"We did have a Rand McNally map for the times we were offline so we could look at it the night before. Sometimes you've got to go old school," she added. "We put little sticky notes on the map to start off and took them off as we went to those places."

There were only three left when the trip was over.

"I forgot how beautiful the West was," Debbie said. "It's emotionally overwhelming — all the beauty and nature."

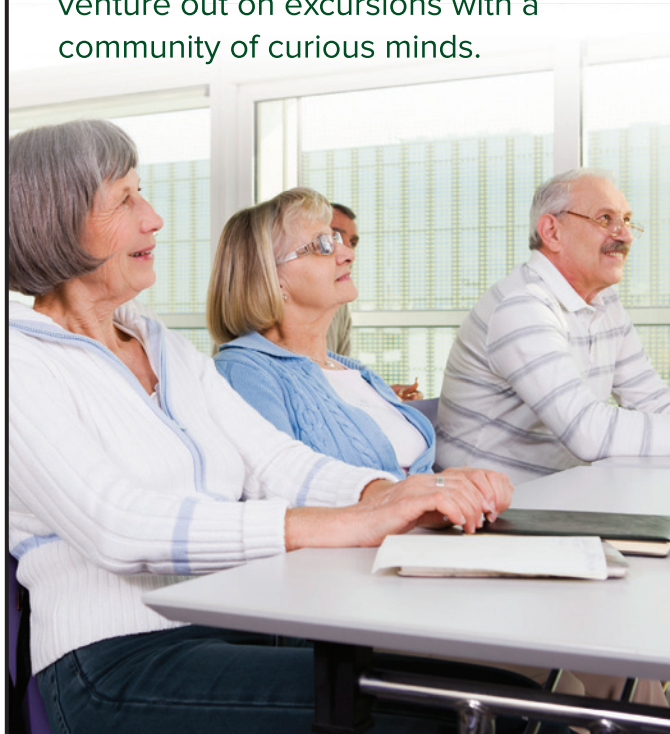

One of her tips was to avoid highways and stick to the less popular roads for more beauty and less time in traffic.

Debbie said she and Jim don't think they would have done anything differently because they covered a lot of ground and saw a lot of sights. "Our second trip might be getting reservations at places we liked and staying for a week so we could take more hikes and more walks in the woods," she said.

RETIREES WILL FIND NO SHORTAGE OF THINGS TO DO

BY ELIZABETH GOLD

news@bizwestmedia.com

With an average 300 days of sunshine yearly, Colorado doesn't have to do much to attract outdoor-action lovers, and when the sun goes down, there are more activities than you can shake a stick at. From world-class music events to hundreds of craft breweries, there's something for everyone.

As a boomer magnet state, Colorado has one of the fastest-growing populations of people aged 65 and older. By 2030, the state's senior population will more than double, according to the State Demography Office.

"AARP The Magazine" rated Fort Collins and Loveland No. 1 in the top-rated cities for boomers to retire. In addition, CNN rated the area as one of the top 25 best places to retire. And to add to those accolades, "Where to Retire" magazine rated Greeley as one of the eight top places in the United States to retire.

Good thing there's a wide range of things to do here.

As a collective, baby boomers lean toward intellectual stimulation, healthy choices, and active lifestyles. As a result, the generation meets aging head-on and ready to rumble — retirement is often replaced with training for a road race or starting a new business. In fact, baby boomers were twice as likely to launch a new business compared with millennials in 2015, according to the Kaufmann Foundation.

Because boomers have, in general, paid attention to what they eat, their physical exercise and their mental nourishment, they seek out entertainment on which previous generations might have passed. Here's a short list of what's keeping them busy.

1. Continuing Education

Community programs such as Boulder Valley School District's Lifelong Learning offers classes for adults, teens and kids and does its fair share of keeping baby boomers inspired. Subjects include travel and language, life and home, business, and the arts.

"The majority of our population is female, over 45," said Mary Kravitz, adult program coordinator. "Our most popular classes are welding, creative arts, yoga, language and computer classes." She describes the courses as hobby classes, adding that painting classes taught by well-known instructors and yoga classes that focus on flexibility always draw a crowd.

The almost 60 four-year colleges and universities, as well as 200 community colleges and trade schools, also keep baby boomers in the learning loop. A lot of the schools sweeten the deal by offering no-cost and low-cost opportunities for seniors to audit classes.

Another learning opportunity is the Osher Lifelong Learning Institute at Colorado State University. It offers noncredit courses to people 50 and older, with the invitation to learn for yourself rather than for a degree. Topics include global and cultural awareness, environmental issues, the sciences, health and wellness, and personal skill development.

2. Bicycling

Both social and competitive, road and mountain, groups for bicycle lovers keep Colorado baby boomers strong and connected to a community.

Greeley alone features 85 miles of in-town bike lanes. People of all ages take advantage of the Poudre River Trail — 21 miles of a paved pathway that extends from Island Grove Regional Park in Greeley to Colorado Highway 392 in Windsor, where it connects to the paved trail in Larimer County's River Bluff's Open Space.

A few miles down the road is Boulder, with more than 300 miles of bike lanes, bike paths, bike routes, and designated shoulders and paths. For those interested in social group rides, organizations such as the Boulder Cycling Club cater to both the occasional rider and those who want to take the activity to the next level. Membership includes weekly rides and happy-hour pricing on beer at Boulder Beer after Tuesday night rides.

3. Running

For those boomers who'd rather make direct contact with the ground, running is the way to go. The Boulder Boulder, co-founded in 1979 by baby boomer Frank Shorter — the 1972 Olympic marathon champion — hosted more than 50,000 runners this year. The oldest runner was 92 — leaving plenty of years for aspiring competitive boomer runners to get in shape.

The Loveland Road Runners is a Northern Colorado running club that gives different ages and abilities the opportunity to run weekly and socialize with like-minded people.

A great resource for Boulder runners is BoulderRunning.com. The site gives information on different trails, running and training groups and fun runs. The calendar of events is enough to keep runners on their feet throughout all seasons.

4. Hiking

Some boomers have put so much into fitness over the years that they've developed what orthopedic doctors call boomeritis. It refers to serious pain and injuries in the bones and joints of the neck, hip, legs and feet and accounts for about a third of the 17 million sports-related injuries in the United States today. As a result of boomeritis, hip and knee replacements continue to be on the increase for individuals between the ages of 40 and 60.

A choice many boomers make to reduce that pain without giving up the call of nature and exercise is to trade their running shoes in for hiking boots.

Loveland features about 18 miles of recreation trails that run along the Big Thompson River, through natural wetlands and along the shore of Boyd Lake State Park. Trail maps can be downloaded from the city's website.

One of Boulder's favorite hiking spots originates at Chautauqua Park. Some of the trails are short and meander through wildflower fields, and some call for more of a time and physical commitment. Tackling steep switchbacks to get to places such as the Royal Arch or the Flatirons rewards hikers with sweeping views across the foothills, eastern plains and even Denver.

5. Music

According to a Consumer Trends survey by the Recording Industry Association of America, the 45-plus age group is the largest music-buying demographic. From Big Head Todd and the Monsters to Leftover Salmon, Colorado bands have kept the rhythm going strong.

One of the most-popular summer music events happens yearly in the town of Lyons. Planet Bluegrass features world-class music festivals that include RockyGrass and Rocky Mountain Folks Festival. Musicians of all levels gather to take classes and learn from headliners. Everyone else shows up and dances. The organization sponsors other music programs throughout the year.

And for those boomers looking to satisfy their classical music hunger, there are free Faculty Tuesdays and professional-level student recitals at the University of Colorado Boulder music school.

6. Local events

Boomers and their buddies show up in droves at city and town events across the state. "There's something going on almost every weekend of the year," said Mark Jackson, city of Fort Collins deputy director of planning, development and transportation. Those events include the art walks, road running races, hikes, music venues and bike rides.

City of Loveland events include the Nighttime Nature series, knitting groups and computer classes. Boulder offers hikes with a geology and botany focus, music venues and photo walks.

Check out city websites for calendars of events.

7. Art events

The Boulder County Arts Alliance posts a calendar that features events from numerous organizations such as The Dairy Arts Center, which includes an art-house cinema, dance performances and workshops.

Boulder Symphony focuses on making symphonic music accessible and meaningful to people from all walks of life. For baby boomers, performances provide one of their favorite experiences:

inspiration.

One way that Fort Collins shines a spotlight on art is through Art Lab — an art, music, performance and community venue made for and by creative people in Fort Collins. The events get everyone involved in the process.

8. Sports events

Denver comes in No. 12 in the list of major American cities that have the most to offer sports fans, according to the Bleacher Report. It is one of 12 cities that have the major pro sports: Denver Broncos football, Denver Nuggets basketball, Colorado Rockies baseball, Colorado Avalanche hockey and Colorado Rapids soccer.

And for boomers who still need more, there are plenty of college sports that fill in the blanks. Being alumni from any of the schools spices up the games with extra events.

9. Recreation centers

When baby boomers are looking for social, physical and intellectual interactions, they often head to their local city recreation center. The combination of classes, work-out equipment and basketball courts make the centers a one-stop shop.

Research also shows that in general, people who use local parks and recreation centers feel a stronger sense of community than those who don't. And community is a sought-after experience to the over-50 crowd.

There are three rec-center locations in Boulder that offer features such as lap and leisure pools, hot tubs, and fitness rooms, in addition to classes. In Fort Collins, people over 50 have access to classes such as fitness and wellness, social events, dance and drama.

10. Second careers

With the strong work ethic boomers have nurtured over their lifetimes, many of them have a hard time walking away from the job. With longer life spans, the need for meaning and an interest in contributing to the greater good, a lot of boomers aren't ready to let go of work. In fact, about one in 10 eligible retirees who are currently working don't plan to ever leave the workforce, according to Gallup.

If they don't stay in their current job, where do they go? Some become consultants, some become teachers. Some turn an interest into a saleable product or service, and some buy a franchise. The main requirement is learning new skills, and, luckily, there are lots of sources for that around!

Get financial house in order before retirement

ELIMINATE DEBT, MAXIMIZE RETIREMENT SAVINGS TO CREATE COMFORTABLE RESOURCES

BY ELIZABETH GOLD

news@bizwestmedia.com

With about 10,000 baby boomers retiring daily, the question of how financially ready they are to live on savings or other types of funding has taken on a sense of urgency.

The present-tense news is that boomer are living longer than prior generations, and their health is generally good, thanks to the emphasis on physical well-being.

The future-tense news is that those additional years will require additional funding.

With longevity alone playing into the mix, many boomers are working well past retirement age. The number of men between 62 and 64 who are working or looking for work increased from 45 percent in 1994 to 56 percent in 2014, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics. That increase went from 33 percent to 45 percent for women.

A recent study by GoBankingRates shows that about 30 percent of people over 55 have no retirement savings, and about 26 percent of that age group have less than $50,000 saved for retirement.

It's also important to note that 2 percent of boomers nearing retirement have healthy retirement savings of $200,000 or more. And 31 percent of people 65 and older have $200,000 or more as well.

"A lot of people have the common fear that they'll outlive their money," said Stephen Waechter, financial adviser with Waddell & Reed Inc., a Greeley-based financial-advisory firm.

There's more to the process of avoiding that danger, however, than socking away savings and hoping it'll all work out.

"Society encourages people to save money, but people don't talk much about how to structure things for an income stream that will last a lifetime," he said. "Part of the process is balancing Social Security or a pension with investments and knowing what people think they'll need to live on."

Judy McNary, certified financial planner and founding partner of Confluence Financial Advisors in Boulder, recommends that people do a test drive for a year while still working and live on the budget they have in mind to see if it works. "It's easier to see if you need more while you're still earning money," she said. "A lot of people don't have a spending plan to know what it will cost to live like they want to when they retire."

McNary's second suggestion to boomers who are still working is to maximize their 401(k). "People 50 and over can defer $24,000 a year, and if it's pre-tax, they'll receive an immediate tax savings," she said. She advises taking full advantage of the funds, especially if employers offer a 401(k) match.

Some boomers are tempted to tap into their 401(k) early to start a business, pay off debts or have cash on hand. Keep in mind that you can be slapped with penalties for the withdrawal, and any money you withdraw will cost you in lost interest.

"The government is going to tax at sometime — either pre or post," McNary added, referring to making the choice between a Roth IRA and a Traditional IRA.

With a Roth, tax is paid up front, and the growth is tax free. Traditional IRAs, on the other hand, are tax-deductible on both state and federal tax for the year you make the contribution. Withdrawals during retirement are taxed at ordinary tax rates.

"People over 50 can put $6,500 per individual yearly into an IRA," she said. "They may not be tax deductible if a person's income is too high, but it's still good to sock the money away."

"It's important to have a balanced portfolio to draw from."

— Stephen Waechter, financial adviser, Waddell & Reed Inc.

Taking care of your health rates high in McNary's list of suggestions for baby boomers. "Research shows that over half of the people who retire early do so because of a disability or a health issue — staying healthy reduces the risks of having to retire early."

The Affordable Care Act caused some insurance premiums to increase, so it's important to remember that a major health emergency before or after retirement could wipe out savings — especially if the policy has a high deductible. Creating a separate savings plan to prepare for that is a good way to mitigate the risk.

After maximizing the 401(k), using IRA options and creating a rainy-day fund, paying attention to investments is the next step in preparing for a healthy retirement fund.

"It's important to have a balanced portfolio to draw from," Waechter said.

That could mean investing 50 percent in stocks and equity and 50 percent in bonds and income assets, depending on a person's risk tolerance.

Moving from the accumulation phase to this distribution phase is where getting a good financial-plan analysis and advice from a professional financial adviser will pay off.

And for those boomers who are planning to depend on Social Security checks to carry them through retirement, the Social Security Administration suggests that the benefits will replace only about 40 percent of worker wages.

In addition to building the funds that will fill the gaps between Social Security and retirement security, both McNary and Waechter stress the need to pay off credit-card debt before retiring.

"I feel like our society has been brainwashed by lending institutions that say having a good credit rating is the same as affluence because it's not," Waechter said. He referred to credit-card debt as a kind of financial cancer.

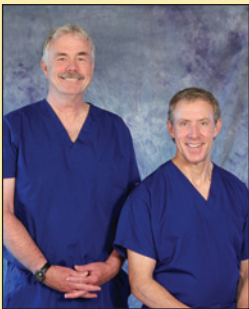

Spending less money will always be a great way of increasing the stretch of any retirement plan, so getting rid of those monthly payments will go a long way in making retirement a reward, rather than a financial burden.

Find fulfillment through volunteering

HISTORY OF SOCIAL ENGAGEMENT SENDS RETIREES TO WORTHY CAUSES

BY ELIZABETH GOLD
news@bizwestmedia.com

Like every generation, baby boomers were exposed to unique events in the world in which they grew up, and the experiences helped form a lot of their collective characteristics.

Some of the most significant social changes in U.S. history occurred during the 1960s and 1970s – baby-boomer prime time.

The civil-rights movement focused on ending racial segregation and discrimination against African Americans, and the women's-rights movement, sometimes called second-wave feminism, focused on raising awareness about inequalities that hold women down.

Some of the values baby boomers developed as a result include community involvement, self-actualization and individual freedom — a perfect match for the values that drive a lot of nonprofits.

As a result, boomers find a lot of personal satisfaction when volunteering in those organizations.

Research shows that volunteering can actually increase a person's lifespan by five years. And not only does it give the chance to give back to a community, it also provides an opportunity to develop new skills or build on existing knowledge.

For years, Lynn Peterson has volunteered in and around Boulder. "A good friend of mine started a library at Columbine school, and when she became ill, I took it over," she said, adding that friends contribute books for her to add so she doesn't have to supply everything herself anymore. "I make sure there are a variety of books for adults too, so then whole families can read."

Additional volunteer activities for Peterson have included cooking at Attention Homes, which provides safe environments for youth in crisis, and working in Boulder Community

Hospital's gift shop.

For the past nine years, she's also volunteered on both sides of the fence at a soup kitchen sponsored by Boulder's First Congregational Church. Her tasks include both recruiting volunteers to make sure shifts are covered and working in the kitchen herself.

"I learn so much in everything I do — I'm constantly learning new ideas and different viewpoints — volunteering broadens my perspective.

"It's also another way of making friends and helps me feel like I'm contributing to the world," she said.

One of her next adventures is training to volunteer in a program called Reading to End Racism. "Volunteers choose books from their collection and then go into classrooms to read stories about different ethnic groups," Peterson said. They then weave the stories into discussions about discrimination with students.

After 37 years teaching elementary school, Peterson knows she's filling a need for both herself and the groups with which she volunteers.

"It's important to find something you enjoy," she said. "For example, my mother used to say that she felt sick every time she walked into a hospital, so volunteering in a hospital obviously wouldn't have been a good choice for her."

With a lifetime in the workforce, boomers have learned a lot about people, technology, industries and business. In fact, smart companies are scrambling to avoid what's called the Baby Boomer Brain Drain.

The problem comes from the massive number of Boomers who are retiring — an estimated 10,000 each day over the next 20 years. The result is that companies lose a wealth of knowledge and skills that will have a big impact on the bottom line.

On the other side of the fence are a lot of baby boomers who are ready to move on. They've worked hard for a long time and would now like to reap some of the benefits of doing that.

A lot of those retirees unfortunately end up feeling as if they've lost their purpose and their identity.

Volunteering in places that can use those skills proves to be a gap fix for them and provides a win-win for all involved.

For retiring boomers with business skills, for example, volunteering to mentor small-business owners through SCORE, a resource partner of the U.S. Small Business Administration, is a great fit. The organization has more than 80 experienced business mentors in metro Denver and Northern Colorado and a need for more.

The Girl Scouts of Colorado in Loveland seeks volunteer trainers who can help other volunteers get up to speed. The Colorado Reptile Humane Society in Longmont seeks volunteers who can assist in the cleaning, feeding and socialization of snakes and lizards. Colorado FIRST is searching for volunteers in Greeley to help students build LEGO-based robots for its FIRST LEGO League Tournament. Lyons Volunteers continues to coordinate volunteers for rebuilding homes flooded in 2013.

For people who have transportation, Meals on Wheels needs volunteers to deliver hot meals. "About 80 percent of our volunteers are baby boomers," said Patricia White, director of client services and volunteer coordinator in Boulder.

"A lot are retiring or retired, and 100 percent of them just want to give back and make a difference in people's lives by interacting with folks that may not have any visitors or meals for 24 hours."

To browse volunteer opportunities in one place, there are two online organizations that post locations and categories — from art and the environment to animals and sports. The Volunteer Connection and VolunteerMatch outline organizations, open volunteer positions, skills needed, populations served and training provided.

The databases help potential volunteers see which organizations, services and opportunities they resonate with.

"About 90 percent of our volunteers are involved with serving food because they want to be on the frontline and interacting with homeless people," said Scott Medina, volunteer coordinator for Bridge House in Boulder. The organization offers services to the homeless and the working poor that include meals, case management, job-readiness classes, and training for paid transitional work.

"Our volunteers are that bridge back to humanity," he added.

Plan early for health insurance

CONSULT ADVISER TO EVALUATE MEDICARE REQUIREMENTS, PRIVATE OPTIONS

BY LUANNE KADLUB

news@bizwestmedia.com

Is early retirement a pipe dream? “Probably” is becoming the answer baby boomers are hearing more often than not, thanks to the skyrocketing cost of individual health insurance they’ll have to purchase before Medicare kicks in upon age 65.

“One of the biggest questions I get is, ‘Can I retire?’” said Tim Herbert, managing partner of Sage Benefit Advisors in Fort Collins and president of the Northern Colorado Health Underwriters Association. Factors he looks at before answering that question are the individual’s age, health and finances. And then he explains that for 2017, the monthly premium for richest individual health-insurance plan will cost $1,455, while the least expensive individual policy comes in at $653.

“That is a lot of money, based on what their income is going to be once they retire. Most retirees who retire early do so with sizable assets and some sort of income stream,” Herbert said, adding that the health-insurance plans his business is selling “are not as rich of plans as years ago.”

He also noted that individual health-insurance plans now are all HMOs — health-maintenance plans — that require using in-network providers and services. PPOs, or preferred provider organizations, now are offered solely through group policies.

But don’t give up hopes for early retirement just yet. Another option could be using COBRA insurance. “This is a great option if you’re close to retirement and want to retire early,” Herbert said. COBRA allows the individual to pay premiums to remain on the employer’s health-insurance plan up to 18 months in most instances.

Once an individual turns 65, he or she can ditch the COBRA policy for Medicare.

So what exactly is Medicare and what does it include?

Medicare is a federal health-insurance program run by the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services. Benefit decisions are controlled by the U.S. Congress, and the Social Security Administration oversees enrollment and eligibility.

Original Medicare includes Part A, which covers hospitals, skilled nursing, home health and hospice; and Part B, which covers doctors, outpatient services, preventive services, lab tests, ambulance services, medical equipment and supplies.

Part A comes at no cost, while Part B includes a premium, this year being on average $121.80 per month, according to Joy Stewart, owner of Insurance Product Services in Longmont and Medicare benefits specialist with Shirazi Benefits in Greeley.

And then you have electives — Part C and Part D — that were introduced in 2006 to provide additional benefits. Part C is Medicare Advantage and Part D is prescription drug plans, both of which are offered through private insurance companies.

The Medicare Advantage Plan offered by private insurers includes Part A and Part B benefits, in conjunction with prescription-drug coverage and, depending on the policy, may include dental and vision care. Coloradans have copays and deductibles as part of the plan and, again, depending on the plan you purchase, there may or may not be a monthly premium.

Part D provides seniors who signed up for Original Medicare — Part A and Part B — with an option for prescription-drug coverage. Average monthly premium is about $35, Stewart said, with the least expensive about $18 and the most expensive $100. Premiums are dependent on the plan and type of prescriptions.

Those who choose to sign up for Original Medicare and Part D can also purchase supplements, also known as Medigap policies, which help pay for some health-care costs not covered, such as copayments, coinsurance and deductibles. Monthly premiums for Plans F and G, two of the more popular choices according to Stewart, are $130 and $100 respectively.

When getting set up with Medicare, there are a few key things to keep in mind. First, you have a seven-month window — three months prior to your birthday and four months after — in which to enroll in Medicare and supplements, with the only health-related question being whether you have end-stage renal disease. Sign up outside this window, and you will have to answer a battery of health-related questions.

Second, if you are working, Medicare rules state that you can remain in your company's group plan if it's credible, or in other words, if the company has 20 or more employees. However, you should go ahead and enroll in Part A because there is no charge and check in with a health insurance adviser to determine when would be the best time to enroll in Part B.

And third, there are a lot of variables on what type of health insurance and Medicare plan is right for you. Both Herbert and Stewart advise that baby boomers connect with an expert who can explain the benefits, options and variables. There is no cost to meet with health-insurance advisers.

Next question: If you do not have dental/vision coverage in your Medicare benefits, does it make sense to purchase separate policies? Maybe not. "The premium you pay far exceeds what you get back in benefits," Stewart said. Although Medicare doesn't cover routine vision care, it will generally cover the cost of services related to cataracts or glaucoma.

And Medicare does not cover long-term care, which Stewart calls "America's greatest uninsured need. This is far more important to consider and looking at than a Medicare supplement. One year in a nursing home is $70,000."

Medicare covers 100 days of time spent in a skilled-nursing facility. Days 101 and beyond are billed directly to the patient. "Are you financially and emotionally prepared to pay your bill? Write your own check?" Stewart asked.

The earlier one signs up for long-term insurance, the better the premium, and she recommends not putting it off much past age 50 or 55. "The younger and healthier you are, the cheaper it is. It's very difficult to get, and the underwriting is very stringent." People older than 55 may still be able to qualify but find the premium may be cost-prohibitive, she added.

Should you stay or should you go?

BOOMERS FACE CHOICES IN WHERE TO LIVE

BY LUANNE KADLUB

news@bizwestmedia.com

Once again, baby boomers are displaying their independent streaks, this time when it comes to where they hang their hats after retirement. Downsize? Maybe. Trade up? Many do. Stay put? You betcha. Head over to a retirement community? Perhaps.

Lane Hornung, CEO/founder of 8z Real Estate, said there is “not a clear vision of baby boomers moving into any one direction,” and choices they make are dependent on where they are as a family. Are they a widow or widower, divorced or single? Are they taking care of elderly parents? Have the kids moved back home? Are they healthy? Do they have dogs? All are factors used to determine if retired boomers should stay or if should they go.

Bronwyn Schuetze, managing broker of Keller Williams 1st in Longmont, said many boomers are opting to keep their family-sized homes to accommodate boomerang children and/or grandchildren who move in with them. Lock offs — one home with separate living quarters and entrances with an interior locked door connecting the two — can be a good solution for multigenerational families living together.

But there are many others who are ready to downsize to reduce upkeep. “They’re not mowing lawns, they’re bicycling and hiking and all of that,” Schuetze said. Boomers, she added, are busy re-inventing themselves and the concept of retirement.

Chalice Springfield, managing broker at Sears Real Estate in Greeley, said her mother-in-law was interested in downsizing to a maintenance-free two-bedroom home. At her price point, however, that would have meant a condo with the potential for neighbors above or spending equal to the equity in her home if not $20,000 to $30,000 for a detached home. “She told me, ‘That’s not downsizing,’” said Springfield, managing broker of Sears Real Estate. So, for now, she’s staying put.

Affordability can affect the ultimate decision on where to live. Patio homes — which Realtors agree are in short supply in the Boulder Valley and Northern Colorado — generally begin at $400,000 and, according to Hornung, they can go as high as $2 million or more in Boulder. It’s the high-end finishes along with freedom from maintenance that make this type of home desirable.

But Colorado and its active lifestyle for people of all ages attracts retirees from all over the United States. “The older boomers are moving because of retirements,” said Susie Ewing, managing broker/partner of The Group Inc. “A lot are moving closer to family and friends. They’re downsizing, and they want a lock-and-leave situation so they can travel.”

Springfield said Colorado’s home prices — especially those west of Interstate 25 — are a shock for many retirees moving into Colorado from other areas, where family homes sell for $150,000. That’s when they look east of I-25, where there are still some affordable pockets, she added, with median home prices many times $100,000 less than those west of the interstate. “Greeley/Evans is one of those pockets. Even if the kids are living in Loveland, it’s not a stretch to buy in Greeley or even Wiggins.”

Those who do make the move want ranch-style homes, Ewing said. “If they do end up getting a two-story, they want a main-floor master because this is going to be the last home they’re going to buy, and they want all of their living quarters on one floor.” She noted that in conversations with builders, she stresses the need for more one-story homes.

Senior-living facilities increasingly market to retiring baby boomers by promoting residences for the “active senior.” And many retirees are drawn to communities that offer continuum of care, where they can go from patio homes to independent living to assisted living and, if health conditions warrant, to memory care or skilled nursing.

When it comes to such communities, Columbine Health Systems has just raised the bar. Big time.

Westwood Patio Homes, across the street from Columbine Commons Health & Rehab in Windsor off Main Street, is getting major buzz from people of all ages touring the midcentury-modern patio homes. “We’ve toured over 550 people through the units,” said Yvonne Myers, health systems director. Some are young retirees looking for themselves, others are looking for their parents who are in their 70s and 80s. Others tour the homes simply because they’re big fans of all-things midcentury, a retro style of architecture and design enjoying renewed interest by people of all ages.

The idea for the $18 million 34-home development — 18 units are finished — came as a result of two focus groups, Myers said. One group was made up of retirees currently living in patio homes; the second group included people who moved to independent living from patio homes.

Both focus groups provided their wish lists for the perfect patio home for seniors. The result? Columbine now offers 1,500-square foot homes with open floor plans, two bedrooms, high-end finishes, no steps and no thresholds, 38-inch doorways, non-slip flooring, roll-in showers, windows letting in lots of daylight, 10-foot ceilings, decks or porches and oversized heated garages with workbenches and storage.

The sleek midcentury design of the project is one familiar to many baby boomers. Myers said one potential resident who toured the community said it reminded him of the house he grew up in in California.

The patio homes are not for sale. Instead, they rent from $2,400 to $2,900 per month. “To build now is not inexpensive, and we’re trying to build very nice patio homes,” said Myers, noting that each of the homes cost more than $500,000 to build. Columbine Health Systems plans to replicate the 34-patio home project in Fort Collins within the next year.

It’s so fun to retire here, everyone’s trying to move in.

STAY ACTIVE — AND ENJOY LIFE — WITH DAILY ROUTINE

BY LUANNE KADLUB

news@bizwestmedia.com

You've just become one of 10,000 baby boomers who retire on any given day. Going from 9 to 5 to a totally open schedule, free to do whatever and whenever you want sounded like sheer bliss in the beginning, right? No rocking chair for you!

All is good the first week or two, maybe even the first month or two, and then you find yourself twiddling your thumbs — gasp! — in that very rocking chair you swore you would not be found. Never mind that it's on the front porch with an amazing view of the mountains. The point is, you find yourself with nothing to creatively, intelligently or physically fill your day. Or the next day. Or the one after that.

Stop that rocking right now! We baby boomers do not just sit by idly watching daytime soaps and game shows. This is Colorado, for heaven's sake. And more precisely, the Boulder Valley and Northern Colorado, where there is absolutely no excuse for boredom, no matter your age.

Let's take a look at what could — maybe even should — be a typical day for retired baby boomers:

6 a.m. — Take your pick: An early run/jog/walk/bike on one of the hundreds of miles of trails — both flat and hilly — that snake through the Boulder Valley and Northern Colorado, taking you past creeks and rivers, meadows, even cityscapes. The Poudre River Trail Corridor, for example, takes users from Island Grove Park in Greeley 21 miles west to River Bluffs Open Space near Interstate 25. Many trail users stop halfway — more or less Windsor — for breakfast. Need more motivation? Join a running or walking club that schedules regular outings. Or use the time to train for a 5K or 10K, a triathlon or even Ride the Rockies,

7 a.m. — Time for your morning joe. With more than 55,000 coffee shops throughout the United States, according to statista.com, you can start the day just about anywhere with latte or Americano. One retired minister makes a point of visiting as many different coffee shops as possible, both here in Colorado and when he and his wife travel. Many retirees use this time to join friends at the same time, same place to discuss current events or engage in friendly banter. Others like to use this time to find a quiet corner to peruse the daily paper or to write blogs or a chapter or two in the next Great American Novel or to check email and Instagram, maybe even play Words With Friends.

8 a.m. — You do know that retirees are — generally speaking — now expected to live a good 20 to 30 years past retirement? One way to ensure that those years are enjoyable is to work out. Sure you walk everyday, but what are you doing to improve flexibility, balance and strength? Pilates, yoga and barre are three ways to do just that! Zumba is great for cardio. And CrossFit just might be your ticket to sexy six-packs in your 60s. Lots of retirees are taking up pickleball as an alternative to tennis, and lots of communities are accommodating them by installing pickleball courts in public parks. That's what Windsor did. And with 300 or more days of sunshine and a plethora of golf courses scattered throughout our state, a round or two of golf can almost always be accommodated.

9 to 11 a.m. — Nothing feels better than knowing you've made a difference. Use this time to volunteer. Your options are infinite: schools, service clubs (many are hurting for members), nonprofit organizations, libraries, arts organizations, and churches and synagogues all need volunteers willing to sit on boards of directors, assist with fundraisers, even stuff envelopes. Local United Way offices maintain lists of volunteer opportunities, as do many other organizations such as RSVP (short for Retired Senior Volunteer Program). Also try searching "(your town/city) volunteer opportunities."

11 a.m. to 1 p.m. — The beauty of being retired is you can take as long a lunch break as you want. Some days, it might be a sandwich on the back deck (in nice weather anyway) followed by a cat nap, and on other days you might meet friends at that new restaurant everyone's been talking about. And thank goodness for grandkids! Taking them to their favorite fast-food joint followed by a stop at the nearby ice-cream or cookie shop (and maybe even the park after that) is the best way to not feel guilty about indulging in that cheeseburger and fries. Or you might opt to forgo lunch altogether and take in an early matinee. Reduced-price tickets and no crowds are a bonus. And go ahead, get the popcorn with butter.

2 to 4 p.m. — You may be retired, but that doesn't mean you've stopped working. Today's retirees continue to consult, freelance and/or create lovely items to sell on etsy and at regional arts and crafts festivals, even local galleries. They're hard at work making beaded jewelry, metal art, watercolors, even tea cozies and Christmas ornaments. If it can be done, baby boomers are doing it. Midafternoon is also a great time to simply take a load off and enjoy a TV program or two that you've recorded for later viewing. And if what you want to watch is Dr. Phil or Judge Judy, go for it. This can be your little secret.

5 p.m. — Ah, the cocktail hour. Perhaps you have a bar set up with the makings for your favorite beverages, in which case pour yourself a cool one and watch the news or the sunset. If you're in the mood for something more lively, you'll have no problem now that the Front Range corridor is jam-packed with craft breweries and hip and happening bars and restaurants.

7 p.m. — While retiring early — as in for the night — might sound like a good idea, there is still so much more you can do. Concerts, be they classical, pop or rock (if there's no stopping 73-year-old Mick Jagger, there should be no stopping you), stage productions (local and traveling shows, with or without dinner), gallery walks (usually the first Friday of the month), pool and darts tournaments at the neighborhood pub and bowling leagues are all ways baby boomers fill the evening hours. If you're looking for something different, or you're interested in making new friends, check out the numerous organized groups listed on Meetup.com, whether you want to find like-minded techies or go country swing dancing. Some specify age, such as "over 50" or "over 60," but there are plenty of groups with no age restrictions.

9 p.m. — One thing most baby boomers have in common is a propensity toward achy bones and muscles. A quick soak in the hot tub — with a killer view of the stars — is the perfect way to end one more day of retirement.
