ADDS IN-HOUSE PHYSICIANS TO GERIATRICS STAFF

BY ELIZABETH GOLD

news@bizwest.com

When it comes to health, recovery time relies on how soon treatment is received. If you have the flu, putting off time-under-the-covers for a week or two generally means you're going to feel lousy longer. If your arm is broken but you don't have time to see a doctor, the bone will probably need extra attention later to undo the misguided way it tried to grow back together.

Likewise, when older adults return from a hospital stay, it pays for them to receive sooner-rather-than-later attention to stay on track with recovery.

Nationally, the rate of return to the emergency room for a geriatric patient who's recently been released from a hospital can be high. Reasons for the return visit vary from length of time in the hospital to how hearty a person's body is in general.

Columbine Health Systems director, Yvonne Myers, believes that a decrease in the amount of time between a hospital discharge and the follow-up physician visit plays a big role in reducing chances for that ER return. Having a team of geriatric specialists close by also helps smooth the transition back home or to a skilled nursing facility.

Front Range Geriatric Medicine, a new group within Columbine Health Systems, launched in May in Fort Collins as a way of filling gaps like these. Two physicians who specialize in geriatric care maintain an in-house office at a Columbine location.

“Sometimes people just need to talk to the doctor and that eliminates the need for them to go to the ER so it really helps to have that kind of expertise in the building.”

— Yvonne Myers
Director

Columbine Health Systems

Geriatric medicine takes into account the effect that chronic illnesses, physical and cognitive impairment and frailties can have on an aging body. Care providers who specialize in the field, like these two doctors, know the intricacies that come with the territory.

Columbine Health Systems spans campuses in Fort Collins, Windsor and Loveland and includes skilled nursing, independent living, assisted living and rehab facilities as well as home care. In recent years, the organization increased its look into ways of easing the toll that release from hospital care took on elders. With services that included 24/7 nurse practitioner care, the number of times their clients returned to the ER dropped but not enough.

Bringing in physicians who were more readily available and who understood the nuances of geriatric care is making the difference, according to Myers. “Nationally the number has been about 30 percent,” she said, referring to the rate geriatric hospital patients returned to the ER soon after discharge. “We’re now at 6 to 8 percent.”

COURTESY COLUMBINE HEALTH SYSTEMS

Often, when geriatric patients are admitted to hospitals, they're seen by hospitalists – dedicated in-patient physicians who works exclusively in hospitals. At discharge, these patients are instructed to see their primary care physician for follow-up but compliance with the directive isn't always acted on soon enough on the part of the patient.

For physicians who are primary care providers for these patients, finding enough hours in a day to visit those who are in nursing facilities in addition to their other patients can impede the kind of immediacy they'd like to provide.

And while these primary care physicians have been great family practice providers, the needs of geriatric patients often require different attention to details. "Elder care is very different from family practice," Myers said.

Differences she points out include end of life care, which provides support and medical care given during the time surrounding death, and palliative care, which focuses on providing relief from the symptoms of a serious illness. Knowing how to titrate medications for elderly people is also a specialty skill set in the field of geriatrics.

The Front Range Geriatric Medicine team includes physicians who are supported by nurse practitioners. "When someone first comes in from either a home or a hospital, physicians start by making sure the meds are right. Nurse practitioners often see them on opposite visits," she added. "Sometimes people just need to talk to the doctor and that eliminates the need for them to go to the ER so it really helps to have that kind of expertise in the building."

PROGRAM ENCOURAGES SENIORS TO GET MOVING

BY SHELLEY WIDHALM

news@bizwest.com

The SilverSneakers badge is a free pass to working out and being healthy, but there's a caveat—you have to be 65.

Seniors who carry the pass for the SilverSneakers Fitness Program have unlimited access to more than 13,000 participating recreation centers, gyms and fitness centers across the nation. The idea of the free exercise and wellness program, operated by Tivity Health, is to encourage Baby Boomers and those who are older to get healthy, be active and exercise in their hometowns and during their travels.

"It's going to help them stay healthy longer and stay independent longer and to have a vibrant life," said Sheri Lobmeyer, recreation program manager for the Greeley Recreation Center.

To join the program, seniors with access to the benefit need to show their health insurance cards at the fitness centers they visit. They then receive a basic membership at those centers, which provide the classes and equipment for the SilverSneakers program and have an advisor on staff to explain the offerings.

Seniors can use the weights, treadmills, exercise machines and swimming pools at the centers, attend SilverSneakers-sponsored health-education seminars and social activities and take SilverSneakers group classes.

In the city of Longmont, seniors visiting the Longmont Recreation Center, the St. Vrain Memorial Building, the Centennial Pool and the Longmont Senior Center (where the pass is only good for the SilverSneakers classes) can use all of the amenities at each location. More than 1,200 SilverSneakers participants visit the four locations.

The city gets reimbursed for up to 10 visits per month for each senior (one per day), though seniors can visit the facilities whenever they choose. The reimbursement at the Longmont facilities is $3 a visit, $1 less than what the city charges for a regular senior drop-in visit.

"Baby Boomers definitely like to stay active, so they work out and take classes. It's good socializing and getting out of the house, talking with friends while staying in shape. And it's also a safe environment," said Lindsey Witty, fitness specialist for the Longmont Recreation Center. "We want to instill those fitness attributes throughout their lives."

The SilverSneakers fitness classes, which are for all abilities, focus on improving strength, flexibility, balance and coordination.

Some of the offerings through the city of Longmont include the SilverSneakers classic class, a beginning level class with free weights, resistance bands and weighted balls, circuit training, water exercise, chair yoga and cardio fitness.

"All of the classes have chairs besides the cardio, and all of our classes are 45 minutes," Witty said, adding that most classes generate an attendance of eight to 30 people.

At the three Boulder recreation centers, the SilverSneakers offerings include classic, cardio fitness and yoga.

“We have classes for all fitness levels,” said Kate Houlik, fitness and weight training program coordinator for the Parks and Recreation Department with the city of Boulder. “They can utilize any of our programs. ... Whatever their needs are, we can point them to the appropriate classes and programs.”

The three recreation centers see an average of 6,000 to 7,000 drop-in visits a month from SilverSneakers members.

“It’s a great way for them to stay healthy and stay active,” Houlik said. “We want them to have an enjoyable experience and also be safe in it.”

The Greeley Recreation Center offers the SilverSneakers classes three times a week, including the classic class and classes in stability to increase strength and improve balance, circuit training, cardio fitness, yoga and splash, a water-based exercise class involving walking and cardiovascular exercises. The SilverSneakers classes are also offered at the Greeley Activity Senior Center and the Greeley Family FunPlex.

“The underlying theme is even though they are getting physically fit, they are getting socially fit,” said Andrea Haring, recreation supervisor for the City of Greeley. “It is our most popular fitness program that we actually offer. We have the most participants utilizing it.”

The SilverSneakers classes at all three facilities get an average participation of 15 to 20 people per class. The facilities swipe in 4,500 visits a month from SilverSneakers participants.

“They can take these classes anywhere any time,” Lobmeyer said. “We try to make the classes very social. Come in and take a class and have a cup of coffee in our lobby. ... We not only encourage seniors to come to the exercise classes but to be part of the exercise facility as well.”

By coming regularly, seniors improve their health over time, Lobmeyer said.

“The more healthy they are, the less health care costs they will have,” Lobmeyer said.

The SilverSneakers pass is available on some supplemental health insurance plans that seniors pay for in addition to their Medicare benefits to expand their coverage, according to the program website, silversneakers.com. More than 70 insurance plans participate in the program, including some Medicare Advantage plans, known as Medicare Part C. Original Medicare, Part A and Part B, do not cover the benefit. Seniors can check the SilverSneakers online health plan finder to find a participating plan.

Insurance plans offer the program to keep seniors healthier and to lower their premium costs, said John Roberts, client consultant with HUB International in Denver.

“It provides seniors an opportunity to be healthier by being able to work out without having to spend the extra money,” Roberts said. “It’s an opportunity to be in a group of like-minded individuals who take advantage of the SilverSneakers program. It’s beneficial in a social aspect, and it’s beneficial in a healthcare aspect. There are no negatives. It’s free, and you can get as much as you want to get out of it.”

Baby Boomers use prenuptial agreements

TO PROTECT CHILDREN, ESTATES, NEW SPOUSES

BY ELIZABETH GOLD

news@bizwest.com

Living longer and healthier puts Baby Boomers in situations their grandparents rarely faced: late-in-life marriages, remarriages and new family start-ups.

With a background that includes acquired wealth, property and children from earlier marriages, these newlyweds face questions about death or divorce with at least one of the events guaranteed to play out in the future.

Making plans to ease emotions that rise up around these life-shattering times is a choice a lot of Boomers are considering before the wedding date.

The Odds and The Ends

The divorce rate for Americans over 50 is on the rise, according to the Pew Research Center. The rate for what's referred to as 'gray divorce' for people over 50 is about 10 in 1,000, and 6 in 1,000 for people 65 and older.

And the death rate – well that one's inevitable at some point.

Family law attorneys are seeing a marked increase in couples who sign prenuptial agreements to deal with the fallout, according to the Matrimonial Lawyers Group. They're popular with Baby Boomers because that generation on average has accumulated a good deal of money and assets during their lives. These legal documents, also referred to as marriage agreements, establish in advance how property, assets acquired or received by gift during a marriage, finances and family heirlooms will be owned or divided should a couple part ways or when the inevitable happens.

"We see older folks who are sometimes getting married for the second time and have amassed property or have earned big salaries," said Sara Ross, solo practitioner with Ross Law Firm, LLC in Boulder. "They want to make sure their kids and spouse don't have a terrible battle when they pass away."

Points to Ponder

Options for what prenups cover vary. For Baby Boomers, the categories differ from the ones younger couples face.

For one – age is a consideration. Life expectancy, especially when one of the partners is younger than the other, can play a big role in decisions. Figuring out how much money will be necessary to provide a comfortable life for the longer-lived spouse, especially if statistics play out and it happens to be the younger person, is part of the process.

Younger couples don't tend to have children from previous marriages to think about providing for after their demise whereas chances are high that Baby Boomers do. Adding more children to the family require more considerations as well.

"Some older couples aren't past childbearing age so there may be one biological parent of some kids and then a child with both parents," Ross said. "Providing for both sets of kids then becomes the challenge."

She uses the example of a child born to the newly married couple, where the wife is younger than the husband, and the family also includes one child from the husband's previous relationship. When the husband dies, the children inherit a divided amount from his estate but when the wife dies later, the child they had together would potentially inherit whatever amount she leaves her or him.

"Money doesn't have to be divided equally for a number of reasons," she added. Maybe one of the children is in college, one isn't and one requires unique care.

"We ask if anyone has special needs and look at therapy at-home care, talk about setting money aside separately for college educations and clarify how trusts will be managed," she said. "What age do you want your kids to get a lot of money? Some people set up trusts and set ages for when a child will get them. Consider your kids and what would most benefit them."

And then there's the potential for alimony in the case of divorce. Ross describes it as money that flows from one spouse to the other to help him or her recover financially and to build wealth after the marriage dissolves. If the lesser earner has spent time caring for children at home, there are more numbers to take into account should the marriage end in divorce.

"They want to make sure their kids and spouse don't have a terrible battle when they pass away."

Having the Talk

Bringing up the subject of a prenup can seem like a mood killer but when people reach their 50s and bring children and property to the union, not having a prenup would wreak more havoc in the long run.

"When I'm working with a client, I walk a fine line of this being a beautiful time in their lives and then they come to talk to me about divorce and dying," Ross said. For that reason, she suggests that couples work on the process three or four months prior to the wedding and have the papers signed 30 days before the big event.

OLDER ADULTS NEED TO KNOW TOP THREE VACCINATIONS

ISTOCK IMAGE

BY SHELLEY WIDHALM

news@bizwest.com

Knowing which vaccinations to get if you're 50 or older doesn't require a complicated medical guide but being aware of the top three.

Older adults wanting to protect their health need to get an annual influenza shot, a shingles shot and a pneumonia shot, but when they get the three depends on optimal timing for protection—as they age, their immune systems do not fight off infections as well, so they need to take extra precaution.

"We know that vaccines protect us from infection and save lives and that vaccines are especially important as we get older and need help with our immune systems," said Dr. Wendy Carle, internal medicine specialist at the UC Health Longmont clinic.

Vaccines are prepared from the elements of either a virus or bacterium that stimulate the immune system to make an immune response, Carle said. The immune system will act as if the infection is present and will make antibodies to attack the infection, speeding up that response, she said.

"Immunizations, in general, help protect people from getting ill, or they help your immune system be prepared so you'll either not get ill or get less ill," Carle said. "Vaccines are to make you immune-protected from infection, so when the infection presents itself, you're not sick because your immune system wipes it out, or you're less sick because your immune system has kind of a head start."

Annual influenza vaccinations are important for everybody starting at six months, particularly those with certain health conditions or who are 65 and older, to protect against an infection that causes 15,000 deaths a year.

"I recommend flu shots for everyone, although you are not in a high-risk group until you are 65 or have other chronic health conditions like diabetes, asthma or heart disease. Once you are in a high-risk group, you should certainly get vaccinated," said Dr. Emma McCarty, internal medicine physician at Boulder Medical Center.

Older adults are in the high-risk group because of their compromised immune systems, said Dr. Marek Odehnal, internal medicine physician at Longmont United Hospital.

"Your immune system is not getting better as you're getting older, it's getting worse," Odehnal said. "This is definitely a beneficial vaccination to decrease the chance of complications, usually upper respiratory and lower respiratory infections, especially pneumonia."

The best time to get the influenza vaccination is from October to early November, because the flu season typically is from November to February but can go as late as May, Carle said.

"It is not a live virus. You cannot possibly get the flu from the flu shot," Carle said.

The shot is needed on an annual basis because the virus mutates, and the vaccine is created six months ahead of the season based on the main three to four strains observed worldwide, Carle said. The incubation period for the virus is one to two days after exposure, so it can spread quickly and to others before those with the infection realize they are sick, she said.

"The more people who get immunized the better," Carle said. "Sometimes it doesn't match because the flu changes."

Adults who are 60 and older also should get a shingles vaccine to protect against the infection, which can cause a painful blistering rash, usually focused in one area of the body from reactivation of the chicken pox virus, Carle said.

"At 60 years old, we recommend the shingles vaccine. This one-time vaccine reduces the risk of getting shingles by about 50 percent and lessens the severity of the infection," McCarty said.

The shingles vaccine does not protect against shingles, but makes the symptoms less severe, Odehnal said.

"The shingles infection in the majority of cases, close to 90 percent of cases, is not an infection you contract from someone who had shingles. This is your own infection,” Odehnal said, adding that shingles can flare up from stress or a weakened immune system. “When you had chicken pox, that virus will stay in your system forever in the peripheral nervous system.”

Vaccinations, from 10

Those who are 40 and older are at risk for getting the infection if they had chicken pox as a child, something immunized for in the past 20 years, Carle said. The infection typically lasts five to seven days and has a risk factor of one in five for anybody who has had chicken pox, she said.

“It tends to reactivate along one nerve. It doesn’t generally reactivate all over the body,” Carle said. “It can damage the nerve. That nerve can hurt a lot. And sometimes there’s permanent pain in that area.”

The shingles vaccine should not be administered to adults who are on certain medications or have certain illnesses, said Dr. Shauna Grady, internal medicine physician at Banner Aspen Clinic in Loveland.

“Talk to your doctor before you get it, because it’s the only live vaccine,” Grady said about the recommended list for older adults.

Another vaccine adults 65 and older should get is two different vaccinations for the bacterium Streptococcus pneumoniae, or strep pneumoniae. They include Prevnar 13, which covers 13 strains of strep pneumonia, followed by Pneumovax 23 administered 12 months later for another 23 strains.

“After 65, we recommend the Pneumococcal vaccine series. This vaccine can help infections from a bacterium called strep pneumoniae, which is an aggressive bacterium,” McCarty said. “You can still get pneumonia, as there are many types of pneumonia, but this vaccine tends to help your immune system cope with the particularly aggressive type of bacterium.”

The Centers for Disease Control recommends older adults get Prevnar first and then Pneumovax for optimal results, Carle said. The CDC may recommend Pneumovax 23 for those 64 and younger who have an underlying condition that makes them susceptible to pneumonia, such as heart or lung disease, she said.

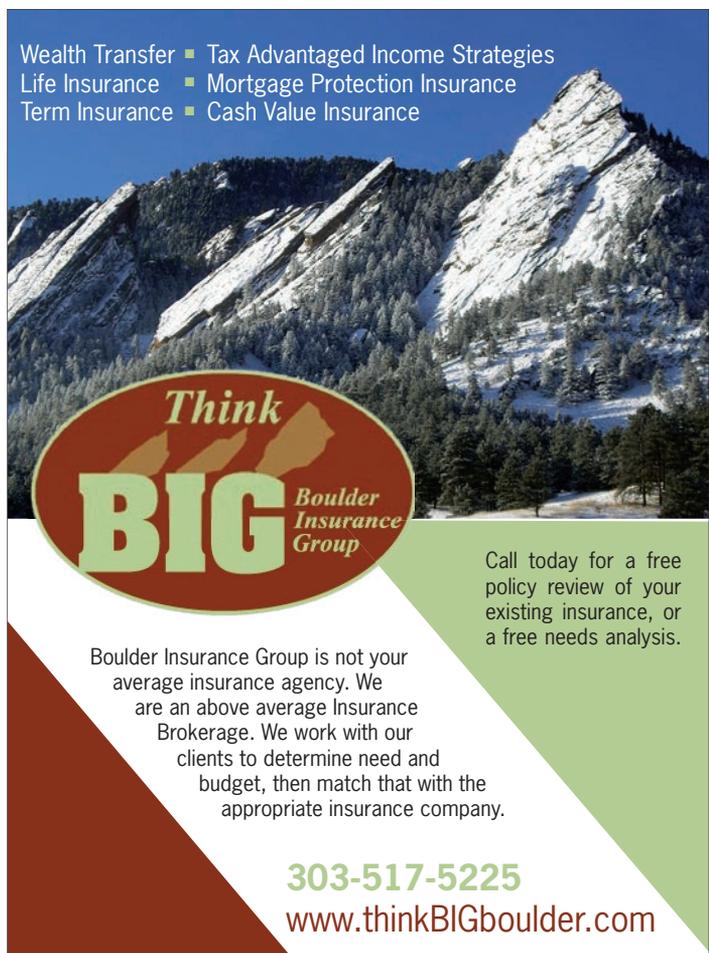

“Everyone’s immune system gets less strong as they get older,” Carle said. “Strep pneumoniae can make people very sick, and especially in older adults, it causes bad cases of pneumonia.”

Another vaccine recommended for older adults include tetanus every 10 years to protect against the bacterium, which can cause lock jaw and even death. The tetanus vaccine can be administered alone or include immunizations for diphtheria and pertussis, commonly known as whooping cough.

“Everybody should have an up-to-date tetanus,” McCarty said. “At least one tetanus immunization in your adult life should be given with the pertussis vaccine included. After the tetanus with pertussis vaccine, you can routinely have the tetanus vaccine by itself.”

The shot is recommended for all adults, but particularly for adults 60 and older, since that age range accounts for 60 percent of all tetanus cases in the United States, Grady said. The combined shot also is important for residents in Colorado, where there were 500 cases of pertussis last year, she said.

“Any vaccine that includes lung protection is recommended to patients,” Grady said.

Decisions seniors need to make

PLANNING AHEAD IS BEST OPTION

ISTOCK IMAGE

BY SHELLEY WIDHALM

news@bizwest.com

Decision-making can be one of those tough things because of second-guessing, hindsight and not knowing what to do.

For seniors, some decisions can be made without drafting the pros and cons, talking it out and agonizing over the details but by keeping personal goals in mind. Seniors typically face serious decisions about their finances, employment and housing, as well as the fun choices of selecting a local beer or wine, the right boot for a hiking trip or yarn for a knitting project, and the best places and outlets for socializing.

Nancy Karlin

“No matter what decisions the older adult is considering, there are goals for those decisions that have to be identified,” said Nancy J. Karlin, professor of psychological sciences at the University of Northern Colorado who holds a doctorate in social psychology. “Recognizing that life goals are important pushes us to identify the relevant components of our lives and continue to move on a path that’s relevant and important for us.”

Decisions are better made if they are thought out instead of rushed, said Manfred Diehl, professor of human development and family studies at Colorado State University who holds a doctorate in human development and family studies.

“What has been shown is that, of course, decisions tend to be more thought out if people make them in an anticipatory way, not waiting until they are forced to make a decision. ... Usually, when people plan ahead, they consider a greater variety of aspects of what goes into a good decision. If they are time-limited, they have to shortcut the process,” Diehl said. “They’re very much determined by what they can afford and what their priorities in life are.”

Setting those priorities and establishing life goals proves crucial for all types of decisions regarding work, leisure, housing, mental and physical health, hobbies and social outlets, Karlin said.

One of the biggest decisions seniors make regard their work and retirement options, Karlin said. The average age for retirement is 62 but may increase as adults live longer and need more finances to support a longer lifespan, she said. Adults who decide to work may return to their careers or take on bridge jobs, which are not career related, such as being a greeter or working in something that pays minimum wage.

Other important decisions for seniors before they retire involve their finances, health insurance options and long-term care. Seniors can meet with a planner, search websites and do other research to get their plans in place before they need to make any final decisions.

“You don’t have to have money to have a plan. You just have to know what your options are and build a plan around them,” said Rob Shedd, financial advisor with Addison Avenue Investment Services and Raymond James Financial Services, which have offices in Fort Collins and Loveland. “It’s easier to make those choices when you’re younger than when you’re on the verge of needing those services.”

Seniors who retire before the age of 65 to 67 may see a reduction in their Social Security benefits, Shedd said. At age 65, they are required to enroll in Medicare, an insurance program that will not cover all of their healthcare costs, he said. To receive fuller coverage, seniors can opt to pay for supplemental health insurance through the major carriers, he said.

“Medicare is a big milestone in life, because you have to enroll in it even if you are still employed,” Shedd said.

Shedd recommends seniors make decisions for their long-term care before they need it. If they wait, they may end up with fewer options due to the availability of the facilities, or the decision may have to be made for them by family members or others in their lives, he said.

“The decision is almost always made for them because they put it off until it's imminent," Shedd said.

Shedd recommends seniors establish a financial plan that includes a living will and power of attorney. He also recommends they think about how they want to spend their retirement years, such as traveling, golfing, being with family and friends, doing volunteer work and engaging in a hobby.

"Studies show if folks retire and have no plan, they have a shorter lifespan," Shedd said. "A lot of it is built around social networks. If they end up watching TV 12 hours a day, their life expectancy drops. ... When you get into your senior years, know what you want to do, pick a hobby of some kind or several hobbies, and connect with like-minded people, so you can enjoy the hobby together."

Hobbies and leisure activities can change as people age but oftentimes are determined based on family situations, finances and interests, Karlin said.

"The main thing is to find a leisure activity that fits you," Karlin said, mentioning visiting a senior center or joining a coffee cohort as some options. "For older adults, social support and interaction is vital to successful aging. ... Nothing replaces face-to-face contact."

Another large decision area for seniors is their future housing options. They can age in place by remaining in their homes or move to a smaller home or a group setting like an assisted living facility, a facility offering congregate housing or a nursing home.

"If you're going to age in place or age in your home, do you have the finances or informational resources to be able to do that? There are financial resources for the maintenance of the home, so that individuals do not necessarily have to go to a nursing home," Karlin said.

Seniors who choose to move may want to downsize, be closer to their families or opt for something that is one level, said Miki Roth, broker associate/partner with The Group Inc. Real Estate, which has offices in Fort Collins and Loveland.

"I find seniors want to downsize, but they don't want to downgrade," Roth said. "It's hard to downgrade after you have a nice home. It can be a little smaller, but you're still accustomed to amenities."

Before downsizing and selling, homeowners, not just seniors, should keep on top of updating, repairing and maintaining their homes, so that they can enjoy the benefits and not have to face doing all of the work at once, Roth said.

"Enjoy the updates while you're there, not when you put in the money and leave," Roth said. "It's really important to keep your home in good condition and to keep updating, changing out the faucets and the light fixtures. That way you don't have to do it all at once."

Roth recommends purging out old and unused items, making sure records of property ownership and other paperwork are in order, and keeping up with the real estate market to monitor the home's value and buildup of equity.

"That's the biggest asset people will have is their home," Roth said. "Keep updated on the condition of your home. Keep updated on the knowledge of what your home is worth. Keep updated on the legal ownership of your property."

Diehl ultimately recommends seniors carefully consider their options for all kinds of decisions and do those things that feel most comfortable to them.

"Most older adults are really competent decision makers, and very often people out there in life don't give them enough credit," Diehl said. "Relatively healthy and cognitively intact older adults can be quite savvy consumers and decision makers. They know what they're doing and can reason through complex situations."

Trust • Care • Excellence

Spine West offers, high quality, award winning, patient-centered care by board certified providers dedicated to treating the whole person, not just a single symptom or body part. Our emphasis is on a high standard of living, and we strive to "add life to years."

SPINE WEST

Physiatry & Sports Physicians
trust | care | excellence

In many cases, it may be wise for a patient to consider other treatments before surgery, and our doctors provide advanced non-surgical care. The providers at Spine West diagnose and treat a wide variety of nerve, muscle, and bone issues, ranging from arthritis to sports injuries.

OUR PROVIDERS

Cliff Gronseth, M.D.      Vaheed Sevvom, PA-C
John Tobey, M.D.        Jennifer Roland, PA-C
Brian Altman, M.D.      Stephanie Puma, PA-C

Our award-winning physicians strive to restore function and improve quality of life.

WHAT IS PHYSIATRY?

Physiatrists specialize in restoring movement and function without surgery. They are specialized, board certified physicians: muscle, nerve, and joint experts who treat problems that affect how you move. They strive to maximize your performance no matter what your age or circumstances, using innovative non-surgical techniques.

MORE THAN JUST SPINE

Physiatrists are experts in diagnosing and treating various joint problems, back and neck pain, leg pain, weakness, and numbness. They get specialized training in nerve and muscle function, physical exam techniques, biomechanics, gait analysis, bracing and prosthetics, and pain management.

Ultrasound

Ultrasound is a safe, non-invasive diagnostic tool which allows the provider to see "under the skin" in real-time to help diagnose and treat issues with muscles, nerves, ligaments, and joints.

Open-Sided MRI

Our in-office open-sided MRI helps reduce claustrophobia and anxiety often associated with MRI testing in more traditional "tunnel like" machines. MRI is a safe, noninvasive way for physicians to examine the patient's organs, tissues and skeletal system.

Award Winning

Voted Best Medical Facility in Boulder County, we pride ourselves in earning your trust. Our reputation for excellent care is built upon treating our patients like family.
