Directory lists 1, 300 companies

A letter from Co-publishers Chris Wood and Jeff Nuttall

Mad cow disease. Chronic wasting disease. Drought.

Talk about challenges for the agricultural sector! Northern Colorado's agribusiness industry continues to reel from the effects of this triple whammy, but prospects — at least for crop production — look better for 2005.

This edition of Harvest, prepared by the staff of the Northern Colorado Business Report, includes analyses of the latest trends in the region's agribusiness sector, as well as about 1,300 listings of ag-oriented companies. Data collected includes name, address, phone, fax, e-mail, Web site, revenues, No. of employees, year founded, products and services, etc.

It's a wealth of information, crammed into a few dozen pages. We'd like to particularly thank our chief researcher, Mishelle Baun, for her many hours spent on this project, both in updating existing records and in ferreting out those new companies that should be included.

This edition also has been improved with the addition of new categories, including Environmental Services, Equine and Real Estate & Auctions. Further category enhancements will be made in the next edition.

It's always wise to remind readers that a research project of this magnitude inevitably will include errors and omissions, though we strive to keep those to a minimum. If you spot something wrong with your company's listing, or if you know of a company that was omitted, please contact our research team at (970) 221-5400 or (970) 356-1683, ext. 227, to let them know. You can also reach them at research@ncbr.com.

Or go online to www.ncbr.com and click on "NCBR Store" to download this and other databases using our DataJoe system. Additional print copies of the directory are available at local chambers of commerce and economic-development agencies, as well as at our office.

And watch for our other directories during the course of the year, including the Northern Colorado Book of Lists, the Northern Colorado Technology/Manufacturers Directory, the Blueprints construction directory and the Northern Colorado MD medical directory. Portfolio, our first banking and financial-services directory, will publish as part of the Northern Colorado Business Report in March.

Northern Colorado crops fare better in 2004

Improved precipitation helps boost harvest

By Sue Lenthe, The Business Report

Despite some ups and downs, 2004 was largely a good year for Northern Colorado farmers, area agriculture experts say.

County data for the annual harvests isn't available from the Colorado Agricultural Statistics Service until late the following winter. However, ag observers from around the area said 2004 was generally a better year than the past few. Improved precipitation levels helped to make it so.

Western Sugar Cooperative estimated a near-average sugar-beet harvest. The Northern Colorado Pickle Cooperative averaged 185 bushels per acre, just short of a goal of 200 bushels per acre for 2004. Marc Arnusch, president of the Colorado Corn Board and a farmer in the Keenesburg area, described 2004 as an average season for corn crops.

Conditions that were colder and wetter than normal delayed the corn harvest in Weld County, said Fred Petersen, director of the Colorado State University Weld County Cooperative Extension. "There's still corn in the field," he said. "It's a rather small percentage right now, but it was a very long and delayed harvest because of the high moisture content of the corn."

Ag brokers in Northern Colorado described high yields for corn, just the same. Estimates of 160 bushels per acre put the 2004 harvest above 2003 yields of 155 bushels per acre in Larimer County and 131.5 bushels per acre in Weld County, according to Colorado Agricultural Statistics Service numbers.

Petersen expected that reduced yields might come for the corn still left unharvested. "The longer you wait, the more field losses you're going to get when you harvest," he said.

The statewide harvest forecast for corn in 2004 reflects Petersen's expectations. CASS numbers put production of corn "planted for all purposes/ harvested for grain" at 128 million bushels. That's up from 120 million bushels in 2003. Yields statewide were down somewhat in 2004, according to the CASS forecast. The agency estimated 128 bushels per acre in 2004, down from 135 bushels per acre in 2003.

Winter-wheat farmers are looking ahead to a better year in 2005 after early season difficulties in 2004. According to CASS statewide statistics, farmers planted 2.3 million acres of winter wheat in 2004, down from 2.6 million in 2003. Only 1.7 million acres were harvested in 2004.

KIM LOCK • BUSINESS REPORT

AG REFLECTIONS — Sun reflects off silos near Johnstown, in Weld County.

Darrell Hanavan has said 2005 could see 2.5 million acres harvested.

The state produced 27 bushels per acre in 2004, down from 35 bushels per acre in 2003. The overall yield for the 2004 winter-wheat crop was 45.9 million bushels in 2004, down from 77 million bushels in 2003.

Spring wheat fared better. A smaller number of acres planted in 2004 over 2003 produced a higher-per-acre yield. Colorado farmers planted 15,000 acres of spring wheat in 2004, harvesting 14,000 acres. The 2004 yield was 70 bushels per acre, up from 40 bushels per acre in 2003.

Hay production in Northern Colorado was good for 2004. "It was, from what I understand, a good crop," Petersen said. "Some people didn't have the water they would have like to have had."

And for some, the moisture that came, came at the wrong times. "We did have a wetter than normal season, and a lot of people did have trouble. Once they cut the hay, it got rained on, so that affected the quality a little bit."

According to CASS statewide forecasts for the 2004 harvest, the state harvested 1.4 million acres of hay. Roughly half of that was alfalfa and half other kinds of hay. Estimated alfalfa production statewide was 3.5 tons per acre for 2004, up slightly from 2003's 3.2 tons per acre.

Weld County ranked first in the state for alfalfa hay production in 2003, according to CASS. That year, 96,000 acres produced 4.15 tons of per acre. The county ranked second in production of other hay, with 33,000 acres yielding 1.95 tons per acre.

In Larimer County, for 2003, 21,000 acres produced 3 tons per acre, ranking the county 14th in the state for alfalfa hay production. Other hay in 2003 was cultivated on 18,000 acres in Larimer County, producing 1.75 tons per acre.

Hay production in both counties was up for 2003 over 2002.

During 2003, Weld County continued its reign as top ag-producing county in a number of commodities. Weld County ranked No. 1 in the state for 2003 sugar-beet production, with 9,020 harvested acres yielding 24 tons per acre. The county also ranked No. 1 in cattle production, with 520,000 head as of Jan. 1.

CASS harvest figures for 2003 rank Weld No. 2 in the state for dry-bean production and No. 3 in the state for barley and sunflower production.

Larimer County stats, meanwhile, place the county as No. 7 statewide in 2003 for barley, sugar-beet and spring-wheat production. Larimer ranks No. 11 in cattle production, with 42,000 head as of Jan. 1.

Cattle production has continued to decline in both counties. Total numbers for Weld as of Jan. 1, 2002, were 750,000 head. That number dropped to 546,000 a year later and in January 2004 was down to 520,000 head.

National Agriculture Statistics Service figures for Larimer County show a similar trend.

Larimer County had an inventory of 57,000 head of cattle and calves as of Jan. 1, 2002. At Jan. 1, 2003, that number was 52,000 head, and by January 2004, the total had declined to 42,000.

Rural health-care problems spiral

Programs seek to address access to care

By Sue Lenthe, The Business Report

Conventional wisdom has it that health-care practitioners face an uphill battle when they seek to practice in under-served, rural areas.

The cost of practicing medicine set against the challenges of seeing uninsured or under-insured patients, changing community attitudes and the potential for burn-out doesn't necessarily add up to business profits.

Dr. Janice Weixelman has found otherwise. Weixelman in 2003 opened a medical clinic in tiny, rural Red Feather Lakes. She divides her time between that and another rural practice in Wellington. Despite dire predictions of tough economics, Weixelman said her business is operating in the black after just a year.

In Red Feather Lakes, meanwhile, people no longer need to seek out medical help at the local library. And they no longer face a two-hour round trip for routine lab work, immunizations and some prescriptions.

Weixelman has tailored her approach to the needs of her community, and she is living out a longtime dream of providing health care in the area.

Weixelman and Red Feather Lakes likely remain a happy minority among rural Colorado communities. Across the state and nation, statistics show rural areas lacking access to adequate health-care services and facilities.

Nationwide, according to the National Rural Health Association, 25 percent of the U.S. population lives in rural areas. A higher percentage of that rural population is 65 or older, more rural residents live on incomes below the poverty level, and more describe their health status as fair to poor. Death rates are higher, while the percentage covered by health insurance is lower. Meanwhile, just 10 percent of the nation's physicians are found in rural areas.

In Colorado, 73 percent of the state's 64 counties are rural, according to the Colorado Rural Health Center. The average median income of these counties is more than $10,000 less than the $49,362 average median for urban counties. Infant death rates, suicide rates and motor-vehicle injuries all are significantly higher.

Health-care providers are spread thin, according to CRHC.

Primary-care physicians account for 70 percent of providers in rural Colorado. There are 20 rural counties in Colorado with no hospital.

Jackson, Washington and Elbert counties are among them.

Even in increasingly urban Northern Colorado, Weld and parts of Larimer county are designated as having shortages of primary health-care providers.

The issues echo around the state. In August, health-care providers from a five-county area in southeast Colorado met to discuss troubling trends. Among those trends is the growing number of patients who are either under-insured or not insured. At the time, hospital officials in the region reported a 35 percent increase in the number of uninsured patients visiting emergency rooms in search of care.

The issue of access to adequate health care reverberates beyond just the problems of illness and costs of care. Health care is a community development issue in rural Colorado as well, said Clarke Becker, executive director of the Colorado Rural Development Council.

"The challenge that rural Colorado faces is that if a business is looking to expand or locate in rural Colorado, a part of quality of life is the availability of health care," Becker said.

Becker's comment illustrates an ongoing spiral. It's hard to attract businesses to communities without doctors. Further, as a report in the National Conference of State Legislatures' State Health Notes newsletter points out, it can be difficult to attract doctors to communities lacking employed and insured residents.

Health care itself can mean valuable jobs in a community, rural researchers say. A single rural physician can generate more than five jobs, the North Dakota Center for Rural Health estimates. Hospitals create additional jobs in a community, and all of those employees spend to build houses, eat and Besides earning less, primary-care practitioners in rural areas face additional challenges, Becker said. “The good thing about being a rural medical practitioner is that you really get to be a part of the community. The bad news is that you are really a part of the community. You’re basically 24-7.” There is little to no anonymity, he explained.

“If you find someone who is dedicated, you’ve really got a goldmine that is a tremendous asset. The challenge is finding people who want that level of commitment as practitioners,” Becker said.

There are efforts afoot around the state to try to alleviate problems of inadequate health care in rural areas, Becker said. “There are six projects right now, plus others, working on everything from dental care to community health clinics to be able to provide as much of at least basic services, as possible,” he said.

Monica Everhart, marketing and outreach coordinator for Colorado Rural Health Center, echoed that. “There are a lot of programs in the state trying to help rural communities strengthen their abilities to provide health-care facilities. We have a recruitment and retention program to help rural communities recruit and retain health-care providers.”

Everhart said CRHC also has programs to help communities obtain needed medical equipment and supplies and that her agency administers several federal grant programs.

“There are a lot of different resources, particularly in our office that are available to different communities,” she said.

Diseases take toll on elk, cattle industries

Herds drop from mad cow, chronic wasting

By Kim Lock, The Business Report

Chronic wasting disease and mad cow disease are both fatal neurological diseases affecting elk, deer and cattle. While the diseases share some similarities, the effect they have each had on their respective industries and animal numbers is quite different.

Chronic wasting disease, or transmissible spongiform encephalopathy is found in wild deer and elk. The disease attacks the brains of infected deer and elk, causing the animals to become emaciated, display abnormal behavior, lose bodily functions and die.

Mad cow disease, or bovine spongiform encephalopathy, is a fatal disease that causes progressive neurological degeneration in cattle. BSE is a form of a transmissible spongiform encephalopathy. The incubation period is unknown, but is at least five years and could extend up to 20 years or longer.

When a single U.S. dairy cow was diagnosed with BSE in December 2003, the world and especially the countries of the Asian Rim closed their borders to U.S. beef and cattle. At first, the industry thought the closures would be devastating, but a strong domestic market for beef has kept sales and prices strong.

In Colorado, cattle numbers are low as a result of the continued drought, not because of BSE. In 1997, Colorado was home to 3.2 million cattle and calves. In 2004, that figure had declined to 2.4 million. The hardest-hit years occurred during the driest years of the drought. There were 3 million cattle and calves in 2002, and one year later the number dropped to 2.6 million statewide.

Keith Belk, professor of animal science at Colorado State University, said he is expecting cow and calf numbers to improve with the improving weather conditions.

Belk admitted that if the Asian Rim isn't fully open sometime soon, the American producer might begin to feel more of an impact.

"There are a lot of feeder cattle held up in feedlots, and the continued closure of the market — especially Japan — could have a negative impact on profitability," Belk said.

Chronic wasting disease has crippled the elk industry in Colorado. The disease began to gain attention in 2001, when the Colorado Department of Wildlife began testing for the disease

CWD has been found in portions of northeastern Colorado and southeastern Wyoming for more than two decades. It has since been found in wild deer and elk in seven states and one Canadian province.

"This disease has had a tremendous impact on elk breeders because we can't move animals because other states won't allow exports from Colorado," said Tom Cox, president of the Colorado Elk Breeders Association.

Cox said the association had 160 member breeders before 2001 and the group now has less than 60. He also said there were 16,000 captive elk in Colorado prior to the outbreak, and the state was home to 6,500 in 2004.

The elk are sold on the meat market, and their velvet antlers are used in medical research.

"They are used to help discover a cure for cancer because antlers are the second-fastest-growing living organism," Cox said. "We also sell the leather, but they are used mostly for slaughter for meat and hunting."

In 2001, the elk industry in Colorado totaled $30 million. Cox said it is now less than $1 million because breeders can't sell their elk.

Cox said the Colorado Division of Wildlife reports that there are 350,000 wild elk in Colorado and 600,000 deer. The department estimates that between 1 percent and 15 percent of the population is affected by CWD; approximately 16,000 carry the disease.

"To show how devastating this has been, there is an example of one breeder in Meeker who had a cow die from CWD," Cox said. "They had to put down the entire herd."

Looking Farr into the future

Water, cattle pioneer envisions change, challenges for ag

By Susan Hoskinson, Business Report Correspondent

GREELEY — W.D. Farr heads for his office in downtown Greeley each day. Not unusual, you may think, but out of the ordinary for a man who is approaching his 95th birthday in May.

The north-facing window of his modest, sixth-floor cubicle provides visitors with a panoramic view of the river, railroad and fertile lands north of Greeley. All are elements that figure heavily in Farr's career as a leader in water development and an innovator in the cattle-feeding industry.

"We needed water to survive," said Farr, who witnessed the work of his father, Harry Farr, an active member of a special Greeley Chamber of Commerce committee assigned to search for ways to bring Colorado River water to the Front Range in 1932. "We knew that we had to improve this country, or we'd just be a two-bit, irrigated country like a lot of other places in the West. They just make an existence."

Farr points to a framed, black and white photograph that shows men dressed in coats and ties and wearing hats as they stand in front of a large, made-made hole drilled into a mountainside. The photo depicts a delegation of a couple dozen men waiting on a summer day in 1947 for the first Colorado-Big Thompson Project water to arrive through the 13-mile Alva B. Adams Tunnel near Estes Park, concluding a 15-year project. Farr was the youngest among this group to witness the event that he said "changed everything."

"We were just standing there, and all of a sudden there was a roar — sounded like a freight train was right by me — and the roar continued for a minute or two. And then without any notice at all, here came this great cloud of dust in front of the water," Farr said. "And those men went crazy. They threw their hats in the air, they kissed each other, they shook hands, they hugged each other, and they yelled. All grown men, I was the youngest of the bunch. And I'll never forget that day so long as I live."

Several years later the Northern Colorado Water Conservancy District delivered the first C-BT water to its users, primarily Northern Colorado farmers. At first, 95 percent of the water went for agricultural use. Now, as Farr explained, "Farmers have sold most of their water to the municipalities because it's so expensive they can't afford to raise crops with it. It's too expensive for the price of the crops. The Big Thompson Project is why we have a Front Range ... All in the growth. That's the Big Thompson Project."

And was this anticipated when C-BT was built?

"Yes, we knew it was going to change. It was all written into Senate Bill 80, which is the law that let us get the Big Thompson Project built," said Farr, who served simultaneous 40-year terms on both the NCWCD and Greeley Water boards. The drought and the Great Depression of the 1930s made the project possible. "How can you put men to work any better than you can building dams and ditches and all those things—a big irrigation project and drilling a tunnel? Took lots of men. And it put people to work. And the two things came together. . . . We're all prospering because of it."

Farr added that Colorado water law allows the use of water to be changed. "It is the finest water law in the United States, in spite of what people think, and it's lasted for 150 years. And nobody's been able to change it yet because it's so good — you see, we can change the use of water. A water right is a property right. . . And you can take that property right and move it from place to place by going through water court."

And that is exactly what Front Range cities and towns are doing. "Now if you take this water off the farms — irrigation water that was on the farms — it's being converted to municipal use, like Greeley," Farr said. Then "Greeley has the water that was raising sugar beets; now we're raising people. And it practically balances. The same amount of water that it took to farm is what it takes to operate a city."

He went on to explain how the conservancy district, municipalities and rural water districts are attempting to answer the dual demands of agricultural and municipal users. One project will reclaim water collected at the confluence of the Cache la Poudre and South Platte rivers below Greeley. Once purified, the water will be delivered to area farmers for irrigation use in exchange for their water from the Poudre Canyon. Some of it will be pumped into the proposed Glade Reservoir, near the intersection of U.S. Highway 287 and Colorado Highway 14.

And farming will need to become even more intensive, Farr said. "We grow more onions in Weld County than we used to grow sugar beets. So one crop, that's a vegetable crop, that fits everywhere. You need onions everywhere."

Carrots, cabbage and sweet corn also are big business in Weld County. "We're always going to have some (agriculture) as long as we can raise these vegetable crops . . . They will raise them as long as they're profitable. When it's not profitable, then people will come. It's just that simple."

What does the future hold?

"Our water is so limited that in another 20, 30 years, there won't be any more water. We'll have these last projects done, and then growth will have to stop. We haven't got enough water to take it on east to Fort Morgan. Growth will stop somewhere in this Greeley area and build solid — that's my judgment of what will happen. That's what is happening," said Farr.

And as the people come, Farr acknowledges that there will be less cattle feeding in Weld County. "Cattle feeding is declining now because of people. They don't like feedlots. They don't like the smell of them. And they don't like the traffic and the dust," said Farr, who pioneered the cattle-feeding industry in Weld County after World War II. Farr and Warren Monfort, who were both feeding lambs in the 1930s, began experimenting with cattle feeding. As they waited for the train to pick up their livestock, Farr explained that they "sat there on the stockyard fence and devised all these ideas. We were just dreaming, that's all. And talking about why we thought something would work, and why we didn't. But fortunately, it did."

"You have to see things, and then you can imagine it. That's the vision the people speak about. You see something, you get an idea and you realize that it will work, but it takes time."

Their dreams about feeding cattle instead of lambs became reality at the end of World War II as the lamb market started to decline. "The price went down, and it was no longer profitable to feed lambs, and so we started trying to feed cattle somewhat like we had fed lambs — just experimental. We didn't know anything. We just did everything by the seat of our pants. The colleges didn't know anything. We didn't know anything about genetics. We didn't know anything about nutrients. We didn't know about protein."

Rather than shipping the cattle to the corn, they decided to try to ship midwestern corn to the cattle. "You see we couldn't grow corn at that time because hybrid corn hadn't come in and the old open-pollinated would never develop in time," said Farr. "So our corn cost more than it did for a cornbelt farmer, but we theorized that our weather was enough better that our cattle wouldn't be in the mud, they'd be drier and cleaner — and then we also theorized that our crops, when they were irrigated, were more consistent than the corn belt . . . and we figured that they had more total food value." This, combined with the development of an interstate highway system and the modern 18-wheel semi-trucks that could haul livestock, contributed to their success.

"Year 'round cattle feeding started in Greeley, and now we've run 50, 60 years, and it's time to let it move to eastern Colorado," Farr said. "And so the feedlots are from Sterling east. They still feed cattle at Fort Morgan, and that area isn't going to grow like this because they haven't got the water. And there's no way to get it. There's no water left."

With limited water, how will agriculture compete?

"Well, you have no choice. If you're going to be in agriculture, you've got to have something to sell," said Farr, "and you've got to raise it in competition with the rest of the world. It isn't just competing with Nebraska or Iowa anymore. We're competing with the world."

Farr offers one final insight for today's agricultural producers. "Now what you want to watch in all those Pacific Rim countries as they develop: they are great markets for our food products."

You have to see the possibilities

Medical Center of the Rockies,
PVH's sister hospital, will open in 2007.

touching lives... then, now, and always

Rulon Stacey
CEO and President
Poudre Valley Health System

Poudre Valley Health System's heritage goes back to 1925, when Poudre Valley Hospital (then Larimer County Hospital) was built on Lemay Avenue.

Since then we've added many services, inside and outside the hospital. We've also formed partnerships with a number of local physician groups to ensure that our community receives the best, most efficient care possible.

Poudre Valley Hospital recently completed a $12.6 million remodel and expansion of its Birthing Center. And in 2007, PVH's sister facility—Medical Center of the Rockies—will open. MCR will be a full-service, regional hospital specializing in trauma and cardiac care and complementing the services provided at PVH.

Excellence in health care... it's our history, our present, and our future.

the medicine of motion

Orthopaedics is the diagnosis and treatment of one, joint, tendon and nerve disorders of the back, limbs and neck. It's the medicine of motion.

When someone gets hurt at work, contact your occupational health care provider and ask for a referral to Orthopaedic Center of the Rockies. We'll diagnose the problem quickly—and as cost effectively—as possible. We know getting employees back on the job is a big concern.

- General & Specialty Orthopaedics
- Sports Medicine
- Foot and Ankle Center of the Rockies
- Outpatient Surgery and Recovery Center

Orthopaedic Center of the Rockies provides on-site medical care for more than 30 Rodeos in Wyoming, Nebraska and Colorado. These rodeos are sanctioned by the National High School Rodeo Association, the National InterCollegiate Rodeo Association and the Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association.
