Compassion, Service and Triumph.

The Realities For Children Triumph Awards recognize and honor exceptional youth in our community, who have survived the adversities of childhood abuse and triumphed personally, socially and academically.

"If you want to change a life, the Triumph Awards is the place to invest. These kids need all of our help."

Stu VanMeveren, Former Larimer County District Attorney

"Investment in these youth will undoubtedly be multiplied and positively impact others who struggle to overcome life's adversities."

Jim Alderden, Larimer County Sheriff

"The Triumph Awards allow youth to see their success and see that success mirrored in the community."

Susan Kaul, Larimer County Department of Human Services Child Protection Supervisor

With your help we will build a $500,000 Triumph Awards Scholarship Endowment.

Your gift to this endowment will continue to give, as the returns are invested in bettering the lives of abused children in our community.

The Acknowledgment, Educational Opportunities and Post-Emancipation Mentoring that the Triumph Awards offer, help to empower these youth to break the cycle of abuse and neglect.

"I am not going to dwell in the shadows of my fears forever. I am not going to let adversity triumph over me!"

The Foundation currently manages $39 million in assets representing more than 250 different charitable funds. Each fund is separately accounted for, and each has its own design and purpose.

Benefits of Establishing a Corporate or Family Donor Advised Fund

There are many practical reasons why establishing a corporate or family Donor Advised Fund at the Community Foundation might make more sense than creating a private foundation.

- A Donor Advised fund combines convenience, flexibility and value with the expertise of a professional staff.
- The Community Foundation provides tax receipts to donors, handles accounting and tax filing, and processes grants.
- You can use assets such as cash, stock, or real estate to make an establishing gift.
- You, or a committee you designate, can recommend grants from the fund to any 501(c)(3) nonprofit organization in the U.S.

nd now, a word from our sponsors, the Community Foundations and United Ways serving our region.

A recent trip to Northern Colorado left a visitor from Russia with a lasting impression of just how central charitable giving and community involvement are to our American culture. In fact, Americans have a level of charitable giving that is twice that of any other country. If you are already involved in philanthropy and volunteerism, you know what a difference it makes in your life and in the life of our Northern Colorado communities.

Your local Community Foundations and United Ways are working hard to preserve and improve a tradition of generosity and civic engagement. We are pleased to partner with the Northern Colorado Business Report to bring this Giving Guide to you as a resource.

We hope that you will take time to get to know the nonprofit organizations that make all the difference for all of us. Even though it may not always be obvious to us what these organizations do, we would quickly notice if they were no longer with us. Our nonprofits impact the quality of life for each and every person in Northern Colorado.

For 10 Years...So Far.

Looking Back ...

Since 1997, the Community Foundation has awarded more than $8.5 million which includes:

From 2007 forward, the Community Foundation will:

- Help donors make a positive impact in their communities by providing tools and resources that make giving easy, flexible and effective.
- Support arts and cultural programs in Weld County through designated and field of interest grants.
- Work to increase the number of students achieving post-secondary education with the addition of new scholarship funds.
- Promote effective estate planning by extending our outreach to current and future Centennial Society members.

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION:

We are here to strengthen our community and we are building something that will last forever - a permanent, growing resource that will be more significant to our community as the years go by.

In just the past three years, the Community Foundation of Northern Colorado more than doubled the charitable assets it manages and distributed $11 million to charitable organizations, schools, churches, and community initiatives. As the Foundation grows, our capabilities for serving donors and acting as a convener and community leader continue to grow as well. The Foundation now offers a much broader menu of services to our donors, including online access to their charitable funds. The Foundation is also emerging as a true community leader, serving as the convener for initiatives in both Fort Collins and Loveland.

In a world where short-term thinking is so prevalent, community foundations stand out as organizations with a long-term view. While things we do by ourselves and for ourselves are often temporary, the things we do together can offer permanence and significance.

What to look for when you look for a worthy nonprofit hen spending hard-earned dollars with a for-profit business, buyers tend to be very informed shoppers. Donors — the nonprofit world's equivalent of buyers — should be just as prudent. However, emotional investment in nonprofit services is usually far larger than the emotional investment in services generated by for-profit compa-

As such, the donor's critical evaluation of nonprofit performance is sometimes neglected based on the logic that a nonprofit that supports a chosen cause is by definition filled with tremendous people who are using donations efficiently and effectively.

In order to be the nonprofit equivalent of a smart buyer, a potential donor should research the organization before donating, and be confident that donated funds are going to be used to their fullest potential.

But how can one be sure that the dollars will be efficiently utilized for their intended purpose? Assuming that the donor has already researched the nonprofit's mission and goals and has emotional buy-in to the objectives, there are several empirical metrics of performance that can be used to evaluate the operation.

> The data used for measuring nonprofits can be found in IRS Form 990, which all nonprofits are required to file each year, and can be found through various sources online. If slogging through mountains of tax forms isn't your idea of fun, however, an independent organization, Charity Navigator, evaluates data from more than 5,300 nonprofits each year and posts the results on its Web site at www.charitynavigator.org, along with helpful articles and analysis.

Some of the most telling measures of the health of a nonprofit fall into the two broad categories of economic efficiency and financial strength of the organization.

expenses are most important. Data collected by Charity Navigator shows that 70 percent of all nonprofits spend at least 75 percent of their annual budget on programs that they support, and 90 percent spend at least 65 percent of their entire budget on programs. These program expense ratios hold for all types of nonprofits.

If your nonprofit is not spending at least 65 percent of its budget on programs, it is in the lower 10 percent of all nonprofits.

Fundraising expenses are also a good measure of economic efficiency. If an organization can raise funds cost-effectively, it will have a higher percentage of raised funds available for programs.

In general, a fundraising expense ratio of .10-to-1 is considered extremely efficient — the organization spent a dime to raise a dollar. Ratios around .25-to-1 are still efficient, but if the ratio is much over .25-to-1, it is possible that the nonprofit has some efficiency issues regarding its fundraising. Obviously, a fundraising expense ratio higher than 1-to-1 is not sustainable.

As an extreme example, the National Save the Sea Turtle Foundation has a fundraising expense ratio of 3.4 to 1. That means the organization actually spent $3.40 on fundraising for every $1 raised, which is not good.

Finally, administrative expense is a good measure of economic efficiency. Due to the different nature of nonprofits, there are slightly different standards to consider when evaluating administrative expense.

For example, asset-gathering nonprofits like community foundations and fundraising organizations have higher expenses than typical non-cash operations such as food banks, beautification organizations, and similar programs. Production nonprofits like theaters, museums, and preservation organizations usually have capital assets that need

Several online sources exist to help potential donors evaluate nonprofit and charitable organizations:

- Charity Navigator, www.charitynavigator.org
- Foundation Center, www.foundationcenter.org
- Guide Star, www.guidestar.org
- Colorado Secretary of State, www.sos.state.co.us listing of licensed charitable solicitations in the state maintenance, which drives up administrative expenses.

Charity Navigator found the average administration expense among all nonprofits to be 9.8 percent of the operating budget. Administrative expenses over 35 percent of the total budget will leave less than 65 percent of the budget available for programs. As previously mentioned, spending less than 65 percent of the budget on programs leaves the nonprofit in the lower 10 percent of all nonprofits.

Financial strength

When measuring the financial strength of a nonprofit, two important metrics can be used.

The first metric is the growth of revenues and expenses. In order for a nonprofit to remain viable, it will need to grow, but program cost growth is generally both certain and uncontrollable. Because of inflation alone, it will cost more to provide the same level of services in the future.

As such, future revenue must grow to meet the projected expense growth or the nonprofit will be providing less. Charity Navigator found the median growth rate among all nonprofits to be 6.3 percent and the average rate to be 9.21 percent. If a nonprofit fails to grow revenue, it could be a negative sign.

The second measure of financial strength is one that is often used in the for-profit world as well: the working capital ratio. Banks and other creditors use this ratio to judge the stability and staying power of an organization.

This measure evaluates the length of time (generally years) that the organization could maintain its level of spending using its liquid assets alone. In other words, this metric looks at the ability of the nonprofit to support its mission if all donations dried up.

Because of different cost and capital structures, the capital ratio is extremely varied among types of nonprofits. However, Charity Navigator has found that the average charity has 8.16 months of working capital. Community foundations have an average of 9.3 years, while schools, museums and the like have an average of around 1.5 years.

If your nonprofit is far below the average working capital ratio for its classification, it is possible that there is a financial weakness.

In conclusion, donors should take the burden upon themselves to insure that their funds are being directed efficiently and effectively. When examining nonprofit organizations, please remember that you are the client. Ask the nonprofit staff questions about some of the measures presented above. The effective and efficient nonprofit will welcome your questions and answers will be provided. An effective nonprofit will strive for transparency in not only its financial dealings, but in all dealings with donors.

Top ten tips for researching nonprofits

Before you open your checkbook or volunteer your time, GuideStar, an organization that connects people with nonprofit information, recommends:

- 1. Clarify your values. What is most important to you? Where do you want your money to go?
- 2. Identify your preferences. Do you want to give to a large or small charity? An old one or new one? One that does work locally, nationally, internationally? Religious or secular?
- 3. Search the GuideStar database at www.guidestar.com to find charities that meet your criteria.
- 4. Focus on the mission. Find nonprofits that fit your values and preferences; eliminate the ones that don't.
- 5. Verify a charity's legitimacy. All nonprofits listed on GuideStar are either registered with the Internal Revenue Service or have provided GuideStar with proof of their status as legitimate nonprofits according to IRS guidelines. If the charity is not in the database, ask to see its letter of determination. If it is faith-based, ask to see its official listing in a directory for its denomination.
- 6. Get the cold hard facts. A reputable organization will define its mission and programs clearly; have measurable goals; use concrete criteria to describe its achievements.
- 7. Ask to see the organization's most recent financial statements and current list of governing board members.
- 8. Compare apples to apples. The type of work a charity does can affect its operating costs dramatically.
- 9. Avoid charities that won't share information or use high-pressure tactics to get your donation.
- 10. Trust your instincts. If in doubt, find another organization to take your donation.

Keep on giving # to charitable organizations

Nonprofits, donors can both benefit from legacies, bequests

or most of the 40 percent of Americans who actually take the time to write a will, including their favorite charity in their posthumous giving plans is not always top-of-mind. But it should be, local experts say.

"I usually have to prompt people to think about charitable giving as a way to reduce their tax burden," said Bob Penny, attorney with the Fort Collins law firm of Wick and Trautwein and president of the Northern Colorado Estate Planning Council. "I can always count on engineers to have thought through their estate plans, but in general people are poorly self-educated."

The trick, of course, is getting the message out to the potential giving public that charitable giving is the ultimate in enlightened self-interest and that figuring out how to do it is as simple as following the dots — or Web links.

Attorney Stan Matsunaka in Loveland said he has noticed more clients are coming in with a stack of materials to ask about.

"For the person who has something in mind already, there are plenty of things that person can do without having to pay an attorney to do the work," he said. "These days most charitable institutions will tell you exactly what to do and the language to use. Just go to their Web sites."

As an example, the Web site for Greeley-based public radio station KUNC, as well as those for Colorado State University and the University of Northern Colorado, is filled to bursting with information. For those who intend to include a charitable entity in an estate plan but have never even heard of a charitable remainder annuity trust, much less how it differs from a charitable lead trust, these and other nonprofits' sites are invaluable sources of information. A little research can save hours in attorney's fees.

"Our concern is to create the awareness that the potential is there," said Nancy D'Albergaria, development director for public radio station KUNC in Greeley. "In 2006, KUNC started a focused effort to bring in charitable giving. That's what you will see on our Web site. We can follow the clicks to see what things people are interested in."

The KUNC site is representative of a kind of marketing aimed at raising awareness and providing information rather than actually bringing in the bucks.

"We do not give advice because from a legal standpoint, we need to be very careful," D'Albergaria said.

Yet for all the information now available, creating a culture of planned giving remains a challenge.

"East of the Mississippi, much more attention has traditionally been given to development," said William Sheets, assistant vice president in the CSU office of gift planning. "Until recently, there was no budget at CSU to market planned giving. So you could say that our budget has increased 100 percent over what it was a few years ago."

Marianne Blackwell, director of the office of gift planning at CSU, pointed out that alums have always been generous with their gifts to departments.

"That's where they spent the majority of their time," she said. "And people who are friends of the university because of the care their animals received from the vet school, for example, are a part of a large base of gift support."

However, those traditional sources of support, driven primarily by affection rather than

"In an effort to support quality child care, the state of Colorado offers a 50% state tax credit for monetary contributions that promote and develop child care activities. Qualifying agencies include licensed registered child care centers or family child care home, foster homes, youth shelters, or any registered child care program that provides similar services. # Dedicated to Colorado's Future

WE'RE COMMITTED TO A BETTER COLORADO

The Gay & Lesbian Fund has been supporting Colorado's families and advancing equality for all Coloradans for 11 years.

We've invested more than $18 million in Colorado nonprofit organizations that enrich our state heritage, make families stronger, promote equality and opportunity, and ensure that future leaders are prepared to face tomorrow's challenges.

How is a community foundation different from the United Way?

The United Way functions more like the community's checkbook, raising and distributing money annually, while a community foundation acts more like a savings account, making grants from long-term funds invested to grow for future use.

The United Way works in partnership with local organizations to address the most pressing needs in the community, usually in the areas of health and human services, especially those serving children and families. The community foundation's scope of funding is broader, because of the various types of funds under the foundation's umbrella. They can include:

Donor-advised funds – Established by donors who wish to actively participate in the grant-making process. Individuals, corporations, families or committees who establish a fund advise the foundation staff on charitable projects or organizations of their choice. Donor-advised funds make it easy to give to multiple nonprofit agencies in varying amounts at numerous times throughout the year.

Donor-designated funds – Established by donors who wish to support specific agencies or causes. A donor may choose to contribute to an existing designated fund, but should understand that the foundation normally allows the founding donor to change designations during his or her lifetime.

Scholarship funds – Can be structured to benefit students at any education level, and may be directed to a specific educational institution. Some donors choose to stay involved through advisory relationships, while others name advisory committees to assist in the selection of recipients. Distributions are exclusively for scholarships in accordance with objective criteria established for the fund.

Unrestricted funds – Funds not specifically designated for use by a particular agency, cause or area of interest. The foundation's board of directors oversees the use of these funds, setting priorities for their use and determining how grants will be distributed to support the charitable needs of the community.

THE 211

When you need help, or want to volunteer your time or make a meaningful donation, all you need to know is 2-1-1. This community solution means you can find out what services are out there and how to access them.

Dialing this easy-to-remember three-digit number from any phone in Colorado provides a direct link to non-emergency help for health and human services needs: child care for low- and middle-income families, after-school programs that offer a safe place for youths, even food and shelter assistance.

Dialing 2-1-1 can also put you in touch with specialists who can get you plugged into a network of volunteers who would really appreciate your participation, and organizations that would really appreciate your contribution.

And if dialing digits is just too 20th-century for you, you can also access the 2-1-1 database and its useful links online at www.211colorado.org.

New Belgium Brewing Co., Fort Collins Bryan Simpson, media relations

"From the beginning, the idea has been to give back to the communities that support us. Even people who have only worked here six months can be involved on our philanthropy committee. Even though they're new to the job, they make decisions as to where the grants go and they get involved in activities. Giving back strengthens ties with the community and with people you work, play and live with. That's what makes a good corporate citizen."

practical estate planning, do not provide the essential base of support necessary in a new economic environment.

"People are not used to thinking about giving money to public institutions," said George Pickell, the new director of planned giving at UNC. "State universities were funded by the state, but you can't continue to cut taxes and expect the institution to keep going. As a result, public institutions are relying more and more on private money."

And the techniques for tapping into those private resources are become more sophisticated. Pickell pointed out that identifying potential donors based on certain wealth factors is central to any planning giving effort.

"A person might have the biggest heart in the whole world, but if that person doesn't have the money to give, it doesn't matter, "he said. "We look for people who feel comfortable about their ability to support their lives in the future. They are ready to give. Those who do not trust the future just don't give their money away."

Plenty of incentives

So what are the incentives that might encourage a potential donor to part with some surplus wealth? Plenty, from the point of view of keeping more of an estate out of the pocket of the taxman.

Each type of gift offers a specific tax benefit. For example, a charitable lead trust provides estate tax savings and allows the donor to pass assets to heirs intact at a reduced cost. The outright gift, the bequest in will, the charitable remainder annuity trust, the charitable remainder unitrust, the charitable gift annuity and the living trust all offer variations on the theme of giving while getting back something in return.

"Charitable giving is a valuable tool in reducing the size of an estate."

- Stan Matsunaka, attorney

"Charitable giving is a valuable tool in reducing the size of an estate," Matsunaka said. "It can also provide income if the gift is set up as a charitable remainder trust. There are a lot of different scenarios."

Matsunaka added that since the ceiling on the estate allowance has risen to $2 million — meaning no tax is now owed on estates worth less, about 99 percent of the estates in the nation, including family-owned businesses — the incentive for planned charitable giving has dropped. And it may drop even more, at least until 2010 when there will be no federal estate tax at all.

What worries estate planners, accountants and attorneys is that, without Congressional intervention, the estate-tax repeal is scheduled

Bequest or charitable deferred gift – A donation made to a charity named as beneficiary under a will or trust.

Charitable deduction — The portion of a gift to a qualified charity that is deductible from an individual's or corporation's federal income tax, individual's gift tax or individual's estate tax.

Charitable gift annuity — A contract under which a charity, in return for a transfer of cash, marketable securities or other assets, agrees to pay a fixed amount of money to an individual during his or her lifetime.

Charitable lead trust — A trust that provides an income stream to a charity for a specified period of time. At the end of that period, trust assets are distributed to noncharitable beneficiaries such as children or grandchildren.

Charitable remainder trust — An arrangement in which property or money is donated to a charity, but the donor continues to use the property and/or receive income from it while living.

Irrevocable trust — A gift in trust that cannot be rescinded.

Revocable trust — A trust that can be recalled by its creator. Revocable trusts become irrevocable when their creators die and can become irrevocable sooner if the creators give up the power to revoke.

to sunset at the end of 2010. That means that in 2011 the exclusion will go from everything in the estate — regardless of value — back to the previous ceiling of only amounts under $1 million, above which the estate tax dials up to 55 percent, from the top rate of 35 percent in 2009

"I'm pretty worried about the possibility that the law will sunset," Penny said. "Congress needs to figure out how to make the law permanent, even if that means the estate tax will stay in place at some level. It is hard to plan an estate if you don't know what the tax is."

Meanwhile, the troops of planned giving professionals are fanning out across Northern Colorado to get the word out. Those with wealth that exceeds need might welcome the opportunity not only to support the nonprofits that keep the soul of the region intact, but also to explore the possibility of lightening the tax burden on themselves and their heirs along the way.

Brinkman Partners, Fort Collins Paul Brinkman, co-owner

"My brother, Kevin, and I were born and raised in Fort Collins and giving to the community was something our parents taught us. So we like to give back and we encourage our employees to do the same. Giving and being involved is something you can share as a company and as you do that together, it strengthens the bond of the company and the employees."

WHO GAVE

The most generous counties in Northeast Colorado in 2005 were on the Eastern Plains; the most generous communities were Estes Park, Greeley, Loveland and Sterling, all exceeding the national average. Donors in Fort Collins gave at exactly the state average, while Larimer County gave at nearly the national average.

HOW MUCH WE GAVE

Coloradans who itemized charitable contributions for 2005 gave an average of $4,074 to charity, while all Americans with itemized charitable contributions averaged $4,388, or 8 percent more. Coloradans in the lowest income category gave a much higher percent of their income to charity than all others - 5.2 percent for those with adjusted gross income under $50,000.

Average Contribution as percent of income

HOW COLORADO COMPARES

While Coloradans in the lowest income category lagged well behind their fellow Americans in charitable giving, their average income was nearly I percent higher. Conversely those in the highest income category (above $100,000) exceeded the national average for that category in giving despite having, on average, 5.7 percent less income.

Donors with income greater than $200,000 increased their average charitable contribution by $2,054 over the year before - an increase of more than 9 percent. More than 10,000 filers joined this income category in 2005 - a 19 percent increase.

The trend of low average contributions is more pronounced in the middle-income categories. Among filers with $25,000 to $75,000 in average adjusted gross income, Colorado ranks 40th in average charitable contributions. For the lowest and highest income categories, Colorado's ranking is very near the U.S. median.

Income Category	Average Contribution	National Rank
Under $10,000	$1,028	26
$10,000 under $25,000	$1,594	38
$25,000 under $50,000	$1,706	40
$50,000 under $75,000	$2.102	40
$75,000 under $100,000	$2,574	39
$100,000 or more	$7,735	29
All returns	$4,074	36

For the 2005 tax year, the latest aggregated figures available, Coloradans gave a record $3.8 billion in charitable gifts - a 13 percent increase over the $3.4 billion recorded the previous year. This works out to 3.4 percent of the adjusted gross income of every resident of the state, which ranks seventh among the 50 states in the percent of tax returns that include deductions for charitable giving.

However, the average for the nation as a whole is 3.6 percent of adjusted gross income, which puts Colorado at 36th in charitable giving. If the average Coloradoan had given the same amount as the average American, charitable giving in that state would have been $243 million higher - nearly equal to the $246 million distributed by federated fund and private and public foundations in the state during the same period.

Instilling value of giving from one generation to next parents' challenge

f you do the math, the Northern Colorado region, home to just over 500,000 people, has about 3,000 who enjoy $2 million or more in investable wealth. That's about 6 percent of the population, and a highly sought-after demographic it is, especially in nonprofit circles.

But as every professional fundraiser knows, there is one stumbling block to convincing the well-to-do to support a cause or an organization, no matter how worthy.

Family.

"Many couples can't agree on how to handle giving money to their own children, and until they make that decision, the rest of their philanthropic activity is put on hold," according to Charles W. Collier, senior philanthropic adviser at Harvard University and author of "Wealth in Families." He was in Fort Collins in February to lead a discussion workshop for about 50 invited clients of First Western Trust Bank on the topic of "The Practices of Flourishing Families."

Collier said money is typically a "difficult issue" for families of any income level to discuss. But it can become a real source of anxiety for first-generation entrepreneurs to whom the concept of passing substantial wealth to the next generation may not have occurred while the money was accumulating, especially if a couple come from different financial backgrounds.

"One of the big issues we discussed (in the workshop) was how to leave money to your children without demotivating them," he said. "In generations farther removed from earning the wealth, the questions are more about preparing the children to receive their inheritance and keeping them involved in the family philanthropy."

Tom Behr, vice president of First Western, said he spends a lot of time with clients designing estate plans, and charitable giving is a crucial component of any plan (see related story, page 14). He has also learned that the process brings up a number of issues not directly related to financial planning that he has to help a client deal with if the plan is to be meaningful.

For example, many parents are concerned about how their children would use an inheritance, so they have questions about trusts and other instruments to keep the money "secure" until the kids grow out of their snowboarder phase or finally marry the "right" person.

Kate Hawthorne, Northern Colorado Business Report

FAMILY VALUES EXPERTS – Charles W. Collier, left, senior philanthropic adviser at Harvard University, led a discussion workshop for First Western Trust Bank clients invited by Fort Collins branch vice president Tom Behr to explore the "difficult issues" of money across the generations.

Philanthropy part of financial literacy

For any generation, Collier added, involving children in the family's charitable activities is a vital part of their financial education. Parents and children working together to decide on some strategic gifts serves two purposes, in his view: the public good of supporting organizations that improve humankind, and a private benefit of developing values within the family, including skills that carry over to the rest of life.

Colorado Child Care Contribution Tax Credit

Setting up a donor-advised fund and involving children in age-appropriate decision-making about the gifts from it is an excellent first step, he said.

"Family philanthropy has the potential to provide a safe environment in which children and grandchildren can learn the skills and competencies necessary to lead fulfilling lives," he said. "It also sends a message about the importance of the values of personal and financial generosity."

The trick, according to Collier, is for parents to realize that their children are different people with different interests and that the purpose of developing their financial literacy is "to allow the artist in the family to be able to hold an intelligent conversation with the private banker."

The best place to start, he said, is to accept that your children have interests other than your own, and help them develop the skills they need to pursue them.

"Think of inherited money as a tool to advance the lives of our children and an investment in their dreams," rather than something that is going to knock them off track.

Collier gave workshop participants four practices to work on to help their own families flourish:

- 1. Move toward more openness and inclusiveness. This means sharing information about family finances with adult children, and answering tough questions about how to deal with in-laws.
- 2. Integrate people who are new and different into the family. This can include the "free spirits" born into the family as well as the new in-laws. Collier advises embracing and celebrating the differences for what they can bring to the family as a whole.
- 3. Work toward preparing children to be a resource for each other. This is where the financial education of the next generation comes into play, and allowing children to learn to manage money wisely, perhaps by making some mistakes before they are out on their own.
- 4. Stay connected to the source of the wealth. Collier says it would be ideal for the second and third generation to hear direct from the person who made the family fortune how and why he or she did it, and what he or she thinks would be good uses for the money today. If that's not possible, family histories and stories can keep that spirit alive.

Collier believes all these practices can come into play at a family meeting that brings the perhaps far-flung members and cascading cousins together at least once a year. It can be formal or a reunion with volleyball and barbecue, but he said it's important to talk about the family's relationship to its wealth — and how it can be used for the highest and best purpose — at least once a year.

For those who believe in doing well by doing good, the state of Colorado has a fabulous, limited-time offer.

Between now and Dec. 31, 2009, charitable contributions in support of child care programs in the state earn not only an itemized deduction from federal and state income taxes, but also a qualified tax credit of 50 percent of the total contribution. That means taxpayers can realize an income tax savings exceeding 80 percent of the contribution.

Both corporate and individual donors can take the credit, as long as they designate in writing that their monetary contribution is for the CCCC. No in-kind or stock contributions are eligible, and the credit is limited to $100,000 annually or Colorado income tax liability, whichever is less.

Charitable and child-care organizations across the state, including the Community Foundations and the United Ways, have set up funds to help donors maximize their tax savings while supporting needed programs for Colorado's kids.
