Another year of health-care change

Health care continues to undergo a dramatic transformation nationwide, and at no place is that more true than in Northern Colorado.

From Fort Collins to Greeley, Loveland to Brighton, Dacono to Wellington, health-care providers are consolidating, expanding and struggling to find critical workers. Major hospital systems such as Banner Health and UCHealth, along with Kaiser Permanente and hundreds of smaller providers, are grappling with a myriad of issues in health care, including how to serve a growing population with continued uncertainty in the insurance market.

This is particularly true in the fast-growing region of Northern Colorado, where major hospital systems — Banner Health and UCHealth — are going head-to-head in Fort Collins, Greeley, Loveland and smaller communities, and where Kaiser Permanente entered the market just a few years ago.

Additionally, toward the southern edge of Northern Colorado, providers such as SCL Health, Centura Health and Boulder Community Health add to the competitive environment.

This edition of Northern Colorado MD captures a lot of that change, with updated listings on newly acquired practices, as well as other existing facilities and providers. This publication features almost 1,100 health-care facilities in

CHRIS WOOD

JEFF NUTTALL

Larimer and Weld counties, along with more than 2,000 listings for practitioners. Readers can use this directory to identify a physician in any of dozens of categories, learn about their educational background, obtain contact information and much more.

Compiling a directory such as this requires many hours of work. We're grateful to the major medical systems, facilities and physicians who submitted their data.

Please let us know of any glaring omissions or errors, and we'll be sure to correct the data online, and in our next print edition.

Finally, we're grateful to our sponsors, including Banner Health, Clear View Behavioral Health, COPIC, Kaiser Permanente and Surgery Center of Fort Collins for making this publication possible!

Enjoy!

Memory care

NoCo sees growing need for dementia services

By Shelley Widhalm
news@bizwest.com

Memory care communities are in high demand in Northern Colorado with seniors aging in place and living longer, and Baby Boomers starting to need services.

“We’re seeing an explosion of people moving to the area,” said Lynn Hayden-Ugarte, director of sales for Seven Lakes Memory Care in Loveland. “Oftentimes, they move their loved ones closer to them. ... Or, they’re wanting to stay in the area where they’re currently living.”

Memory care communities provide a homelike environment with nursing and other services for adults with Alzheimer’s and other forms of dementia — a diagnosis that has become more prevalent from a better understanding of the progressive, degenerative disease.

“We’re doing a better job of recognizing and diagnosing it through testing,” Hayden-Ugarte said, citing a statistic that one in four people over the age of 80 are diagnosed with dementia. “In the last 20 years, we started to learn so much more about it. Every year, we’re getting more funding for research. Alzheimer’s is the only disease that there isn’t a known cause, there is no effective treatment, and there is not a cure.”

About 15 years ago, Hayden-Ugarte started seeing Northern Colorado skilled nursing and assisted living facilities establish separate wings for memory care, and standalone facilities came to the area about 10 years ago, she said, adding that with the surge of memory care communities, the need currently is being met and likely will be for the next five to 10 years.

The standalone facilities typically provide the layouts and furnishings of a home setting, unlike the institutional setting of a nursing facility, that is more conducive to those with dementia needing a familiar environment, Hayden-Ugarte said. The facilities, often secured to prevent residents from wandering and staffed with 24-hour nursing care, also provide programming and activities with the cues, directions and specialized, individualized care geared to those with dementia, she said. Staff are trained to work with those with dementia and help them with things like getting dressed, daily hygiene and eating meals, she said.

“Because it’s a regressive disease, you unlearn everything you learned in life. It makes decision-making difficult,” Hayden-Ugarte said.

assisted living facility that specializes in Alzheimer's and dementia care since 2012, offers MBKconnections, a resident enrichment program that helps meet the residents' physical, social, intellectual, emotional, spiritual and occupational needs, Hayden-Ugarte said. The program features fitness classes, social and family engagement activities, and structured activities to promote sensory stimulation and wellbeing, she said.

"It's really important for people to get out and visit the different communities to see what they offer because it's not one size fits all," Hayden-Ugarte said.

Fort Collins-based Columbine Health Systems operates 11 assisted living and nursing care facilities in Fort Collins, Loveland and Windsor, three of which have wings for memory care and are constantly full, said Yvonne Myers, health systems director of Columbine Health Systems. The wings, which are secured, are designated for residents who wander and benefit from a smaller environment, she said.

The residents have individualized care plans based on their interests and level of dementia that include activities such as exercise, arts and crafts, cooking and music.

"It's the same things we all like to do but offered in a safe environment and presented in a different way," Myers said.

Men, however, can have a more difficult time getting into memory care units, especially in roommate situations where there are more women than men entering the facilities, Myers said.

McKee Medical Center in Loveland developed a program that helps patients with dementia coming to the hospital with other diagnoses maintain their functional abilities and avoid further decline, said Julie Roth-Carter, clinical nurse specialist at McKee. Staff tailors a plan of care for each patient after assessing the patient's cognitive abilities and asking the family about their activity involvement and what triggers their anxiety and is calming for them, she said.

The idea of the plan, implemented April 1, is to "prevent agitated behavior and help them stay in the routines they have at home," Roth-Carter said. "We try to mimic the routine they were in from home or whatever setting they were in."

The plan includes four tool kits with appropriate items for each level of dementia from mild to severe, such as cards, fidget boards, squeegee balls, sorting activities and music.

"We're trying to decrease anxiety and fear while they're here with us," Roth-Carter said.

Emily Demmler, occupational therapist at McKee, helped develop the dementia plans of care and identify the items for the kits.

“We realize we had an opportunity to improve care of patients with dementia,” Demmler said. “We have seen a decrease in agitated behavior and a quicker discharge.”

The WindSong family of companies uses the Montessori Inspired Lifestyle Approach to memory care communities, accredited by Dr. Cameron Camp, director of research and development at the Center for Applied Research in Dementia. He retooled a teaching method traditionally used on young children for Alzheimer’s patients to help them gain some of the skills they lost to the disease.

WindSong at Northridge in Greeley is the third memory care community worldwide to be accredited by Camp. WindSong communities also are in Fort Collins, WindSong at Rock Creek, and Salem, Ore.

“The Montessori approach to dementia care is all about an engaging and purposeful lifestyle,” said Stacey Flint, regional marketing director and Montessori trainer for the WindSong family of companies. “The Montessori approach is focused on what they can do, seeing opportunities and providing pathways for those opportunities.”

The approach identifies the tasks and skills the residents still can do, enabling, rather than further disabling them, while also identifying their interests and providing activities that meet those interests, such as cooking, socializing and community engagement, Flint said.

“We try to provide them with opportunities to actively engage in their lives again,” Flint said. “What we like to get at is the art of daily living. ... We’re placing them in an environment that builds confidence.”

Larimer County has 10 facilities dedicated to memory care or that have a memory care wing, said Amber Franzel, lead ombudsman for the Office on Aging in Larimer County.

“Larimer County has one of the biggest populations of aging adults in the state,” Franzel said. “We expect to see more of a need for memory care but also for all of our aging services.”

Newer memory care facilities likely will be private pay, based on business decisions, said Heather O’Hayre, deputy director of the Larimer County Department of Human Services, adding that Medicaid and Medicare claims are cumbersome for the providers.

COURTESY WINDSONG

Windsong uses elements of the Montessori educational method to keep patients engaged. Here, residents prepare a planter.

SEVEN LAKES MEMORY CARE

Memory-care facilities such as this one in Loveland often create spaces that are home-like and comfortable, not institutional.

“Unfortunately for adults who can’t pay, from a business perspective, they are able to fill those beds without taking Medicaid,” O’Hayre said.

Most of the memory care units recently built in Northern Colorado also have been private pay, Myers said. The two Alzheimer’s nursing skill facilities that Columbine Health Systems operates take Medicare and Medicaid, but the assisted living facility with a memory care wing is private pay, she said.

“The greatest need we have is for centers that have staff who are trained and understand how to take care of this kind of patient. It’s a unique subset of aging,” Myers said. “Buildings are not enough. Right now, we need people to take care of them. ... It can be hard work to repeat the same thing 10 times a day. ... It takes a special person and training with your staff. It’s not a fun disease for sure.”

Cost drives discussion in health-care industry

By Ken Amundson

kamundson@bizwest.com

FORT COLLINS — Health-care costs are the overriding issue on the minds of executives from Northern Colorado healthcare institutions, and almost all other issues flow from or touch that issue.

Executives met with BizWest at the Northern Colorado Health Care CEO Roundtable in June 2018 in Fort Collins.

From Medicaid reimbursements to the ability to pay increased wages for health-care workers to consumers dropping out of individual insurance plans — cost all were top of mind.

Health insurance

“We’re seeing people dropping out of insurance on individual plans,” said Evan Hyatt, executive director of operations for Kaiser Permanente NoCo. While the Affordable Care Act is still in place, uncertainty has entered the equation as a result of the Trump administration's efforts to eliminate the health-care law. Uncertainty, Hyatt said, results in premium increases.

EVAN HYATT

Carol Plock, executive director of the Health District of Northern Larimer County, said, "It's not wholesale dropping out; it's reducing. People suffering worst are those at lower middle income. If people don't qualify for Medicaid, then deductibles and copays can be so high that they delay care. A lot of systems are suffering because people can't pay the copays when they do seek treatment."

CAROL PLOCK

"If we lose the individual insurance market, somebody has to pay for that care," she said.

JIM SAMPSON

Jim Sampson of HUB International, which operates in the employee benefits and health insurance markets, said group plans are still being offered to employees of many companies because the employment market is so tight due to historically low unemployment rates. Companies need to offer insurance as an incentive to get and keep workers.

Dr. Jim Sprowell, CEO of Associates in Family Medicine, a large Fort Collins-based clinic, said the changes in health insurance plans have resulted in many patients unable to pay the high deductibles. "We've dumped more of the cost on the consumer and we're feeling that at the primary care level," he said.

Driving down costs

Health-care providers are developing numerous strategies to reduce the costs that drive decisions to seek care and affect profitability of hospitals and clinics.

Margo Karsten, CEO of Banner Health in Northern Colorado, said Banner has 22 clinical consensus groups that examine a diagnosis and figure out ways to streamline care. When a procedure is reimbursed through Medicaid, they ask what they can do to make sure that the reimbursement covers the cost.

Kevin Unger, president and CEO of UCHealth in Northern Colorado, said UCHealth is experimenting with new technology such as "wearables" — devices that patients can wear to monitor vitals 24/7. The wearables help avoid night time interruptions as well as enable reduced levels of staffing.

UCHealth is also using the virtual clinic model in which a patient can use Skype from home to connect with a physician.

Sprowell said Associates in Family Medicine is seeing 800 to 1,000 new patients a month because of the high rates of growth in the area. Not only does that stress existing clinic facilities, but the clinic is having to rapidly recruit doctors to accommodate the patient growth and the impact of retiring physicians.

He said the organization is trying to expand access so that the growing number of patients can be seen before their conditions force them into emergency rooms, where costs are higher.

He also said that new electronic health record systems are having a positive impact on care and simplify things for patients moving from one treatment facility to another.

"We can get access to any system that is running Epic (medical records software system), which really helps drive down costs," he said.

Dr. John Bender of Miramont Family Medicine said primary care facilities are squeezed by low reimbursements from Medicaid and the inability of patients to pay. He said primary care doctors and facilities receive about six cents of every dollar spent on medicine.

Bender said Miramont is looking for ways to be reduce costs, including adding a direct primary care model for about 1,000 patients. Direct primary care is an alternative to fee-for-service insurance programs in which patients pay a monthly, quarterly or annual fee for most health-care services.

MARGO KARSTEN

KEVIN UNGER

Miramont has also closed a Loveland clinic and plans to close the clinic's Wellington facility.

Long-term care facilities such as Good Samaritan, which has a range of senior living facilities from independent living to skilled nursing care, have partnered with home care services and others in an effort to keep patients in their homes longer. Offering meal programs helps independent living patients maintain their physical well being longer, said Lisa Melby, executive director of Good Samaritan — Loveland Village.

Yvonne Myers, chief operating officer of Columbine Health Systems, agreed. Columbine has added patio homes to its portfolio so that seniors have a continuum of care. It has partnered with traditional health-care providers and added an in-house physician group — 2 doctors and 15 nurse practitioners — so that patients can be seen whenever they have an issue without having to leave the facility to seek treatment elsewhere. "Having physicians who understand geriatrics is important," she said.

Plock said the health-care system is not adequately planning for the large numbers of senior citizens who will need care in the years ahead. She said the senior population is expected to triple between 2010 and 2040. "People coming into that category don't have the same level of retirement plan that previous generations had. The only safety net is Medicaid and a lot of people won't be able to afford long-term care," she said.

Unger said UCHealth is expanding orthopedic units in an effort to get ready for older patients.

Karsten said Banner is trying to tune primary care services in order to help older patients stay out of the hospital.

And Kaiser's focus is on preventive care for seniors for the same reason — to reduce costs down the road, said Hyatt.

Jim LaBorde, administrator for Centers for Gastroenterology, said his organization is adding providers and expanding facilities to deal with anticipated population growth and increases in older patients.

Please see Cost Drives, page 10

Cost Drives, from 9

Labor issue

Almost all health-care providers are having difficulty finding qualified staff members to meet patient needs.

Marilyn Schock, president of UHealth Greeley Hospital, which is still under construction, is currently working to find a large number of staff members for all departments. She said that costs of living, especially housing costs, in Northern Colorado are a major factor in this recruitment effort. "It's probably one of our number one conversations that we've had when hiring," she said. She said educational resources in the area help, especially in recruiting nurses.

Myers said educational facilities are listening to health-care providers and working to train the people needed. She said Columbine is also embarking on an apprenticeship program to groom high school students for careers in health care.

MARILYN SCHOCK

Schock said all areas are impacted. Housekeeping staff positions, for example, are impacted by the growing number of hotels in the region, which also recruit from the same pool of people.

The shortage of qualified workers is driving up salaries, the health-care executives said.

Salaries for primary care doctors, for example, have increased from about $173,000 to $217,000, Bender said.

LaBorde said benefit packages are also important. Employees like a range of benefits, from educational reimbursements to retirement plans and multiple types of insurance.

Some entities are also paying signing bonuses. Dr. Andrew Mills, president of Advanced Medical Imaging, said signing bonuses are used extensively in recruiting radiologists.

Hyatt said some doctors, especially those coming out of residency, like having extra time off.

Mental health care

Mental health care was described as "the great tragedy" by Plock. She said Larimer County doesn't have a drug and alcohol withdrawal facility in the county. She said people with drug and alcohol issues need to be engaged in treatment and not just with detoxification.

She said the region is missing intermediate mental health care outside of hospital admission. She said mental health professionals are working to create a continuum of care and "make it a seamless system. We could save a lot of money if we could intervene earlier," she said.

Sprowell said Associates in Family Medicine has mental health professionals in the office, which greatly helps the primary care doctors who don't have that expertise. There's a shortage of psychiatrists nationwide, Sprowell said, and the same is true locally. He said mental health experts in his practice are booked out for the next three months.

Bender said the regional health-care system is also impacted because it's a regional center of excellence. Miramont, for example, has patients driving in from Rapid City, S.D., because services aren't available there.

Integrative medicine combines traditional, alternative therapies

By Shelley Widhalm
news@bizwest.com

Integrative medicine is the newest term for combining conventional medicine with alternative medicine and includes a whole array of treatments from medication to massage.

“In the past, some people used the term ‘holistic’ trying to suggest the same thing, looking at the whole person and at the whole array of options,” said Dr. Paul Berger, family medicine specialist at Rocky Mountain Family Medicine in Boulder and one of 15 practicing integrative medicine physicians in the city. “But so many people have begun to use ‘holistic’ for their alternative therapies that it’s no longer an accurate term.”

Integrative medicine incorporates traditional or Western medicine, such as medications and surgery, with non-traditional practices that include massage therapy, acupuncture, tai chi, meditation, yoga, healing touch, nutrition and exercise. Most integrative medicine and holistic practices address lifestyle and promote nutrition and exercise alongside other treatments, and Western medicine can include those lifestyle aspects, Berger said.

“It gives you a broader range of tools to use, and hopefully you can find one with fewer side effects,” Berger said. “It’s one more way to take care of your health without having to do something interventional with side effects.”

Integrative medicine, which focuses on the mind, body and soul of the patient, is gaining in popularity due to the positive outcomes many patients are experiencing, said Dr. Katie Takacs, doctor of chiropractic at Gateway Natural Medicine in Berthoud.

“The majority of people don’t want to wake up and take medications for the rest of their life. They are looking for a way to ‘get back on track’ and improve their lives,” Takacs said. “Many people are finding that their lives improve overall, and they have more energy, lose weight and are in less pain. They are taught lifestyle changes that help them to maintain these improvements.”

and, if used properly, can create major changes in a patient’s life, Takacs said.

“This type of care focuses on teaching the patient lifestyle changes that will help to improve their current issues, as well as preventing other problems from occurring in the future,” she said.

Longmont United Hospital is among six Centura Health hospitals that provide integrative medicine for its patients through Centura Health Integrative Medicine in the Longmont, Denver and Vail areas. Longmont United Hospital began offering integrative medicine in 1994 and joined Centura in 2015.

“Integrative medicine is the practice of evidence-based therapies that support traditional Western service lines,” said Michelle Whitmore, nursing director and licensed acupuncturist with Longmont United Hospital. “It’s helping the whole person. We’re not just treating the biological body; we’re treating all of them, the mind, the body, the spirit, the whole person.”

Longmont United Hospital incorporates integrative medicine in the areas of pediatrics, birthing, oncology, cardiology and orthopedics, along with medical and surgical procedures, Whitmore said.

For instance, acupuncture can be used alongside chemotherapy in the treatment of cancer to calm the nervous system and to reduce the side effects of nausea and fatigue, Whitmore said. It also can be used to promote labor, address insomnia and anxiety-related disorders, help prepare for surgery and address post-surgical pain and swelling, she said.

A chronic pain management program called solution-focused pain self management aims to replace pain medications with integrative medicine, Whitmore said. Patients learn how to manage their chronic pain, such as through mindfulness meditation, where they use meditation to bolster the healing process, she said.

“We replace a pill with a strategy with its own healing opiates,” Whitmore said, adding that medications are important for healing but can be overused. “We’re moving from a place of too many medications to the right amount and also providing other support. When we provide other support, we can help the medications work well.”

The strategy works, in part, because the body releases neurotransmitters and other chemicals that serve as natural pain relievers, Whitmore said.

“When you’re feeling good, your body heals more quickly,” Whitmore said.

Poudre Valley Hospital in Fort Collins employs integrative medicine with some of its cancer patients through an evidence-informed, healing-oriented treatment that combines traditional and complementary interventions, said Dr. Gary Goodman, medical director for the integrative medicine oncology service line at Poudre Valley Hospital. The hospital has offered integrative medicine since April 2017.

The treatment begins with an input questionnaire about each patient’s exercise, sleep and stress patterns, support systems and other factors, Goodman said. Cancer has a known connection to inflammation, and things like poor diet, lack of exercise, stress and environmental toxins can result in inflammation, he said.

Once the information is gathered, Goodman comes up with an individualized therapeutic regimen for the patient, which could include mindfulness-based stress reduction, restorative yoga focused on relaxation, tai chi, strengthening exercises, massage therapy, anti-inflammation diets and other programs.

“It’s the whole mind-body connection that is really important in integrative medicine,” Goodman said. “One of our basic tenets related to chronic inflammation is that stress contributes to inflammation.”

Acupuncture and stress reduction techniques, for example, can help patients deal with the side effects of chemotherapy, and the various movement treatments can help the body get rid of toxins, Goodman said.

“As long as it’s evidence-based, I’m happy to use it,” Goodman said.

Good Samaritan Medical Center in Lafayette offers integrative medicine therapies for its patients and the community, including acupuncture, massage therapy, healing touch and aromatherapy, as well as yoga, mindfulness-based stress reduction, nutrition and diabetes education. In the area of cancer, the treatments include yoga, massage therapy, healing touch and acupuncture to address the side effects of nausea and fatigue, and massage therapy is provided for new moms in the women’s and children’s units.

The therapies aim to enhance the care of patients, said Ruth Ross, clinical manager of Good Samaritan Medical Center for integrative medicine and outpatient rehabilitation, a separate center opened in 2006, though integrative medicine has been offered since the hospital’s opening in 2004.

it’s not just treating the ailment,” Ross said. “We’re another tool a physician or our nurses can reach out to provide comfort.”

Community colleges will add BSN degree

By Dallas Heltzell

news@bizwest.com

Colorado suffers from an acute case of a nursing deficiency, and its community colleges will now be able to provide a cure, thanks to legislation passed this year.

Last year saw 21,000 job listings for registered nurses with a bachelor's degree, and 80 percent of those were for entry-level positions, said Nancy McCallin, president of the Colorado Community College system, which includes the Front Range Community College campuses in Fort Collins, Loveland, Longmont and Brighton.

At least 500 positions requiring a bachelor of science in nursing degree go unfilled each year in Colorado, which would have resulted in a cumulative shortage of 4,500 nurses with BSNs by 2024 if something wasn't done.

"If there isn't a workforce shortage here," McCallin said, "I don't know what is. Hospitals are having to hire traveling nurses from out of state," she said, adding that if they obtain their degrees somewhere else, "that money's going out of state, and it raises health-care costs in Colorado."

"We believe we can be a piece of the solution and help alleviate that huge, huge shortage."

The prescription: House Bill 1086, a nursing-education bill that would let community colleges offer the four-year nursing degree that hospitals increasingly are requiring instead of just a two-year associate's degree that leads to licensure as a registered nurse. Work toward a BSN includes leadership and management training that's not part of the two-year RN program, and a BSN also is required if a nurse wants to get a graduate degree and teach.

The state's major public universities offer four-year BSN programs, as do the public Colorado Mesa University in Grand Junction and Glenwood Springs-based Colorado Mountain College, as well as the private Colorado Christian and Regis universities, but McCallin said "our tuition for the program would be about $26,000, whereas Mesa is about $45,000 and the private institutions run anywhere from $65,000 to $175,000.

"We know we can do it affordably," she said.

"Our colleges have made significant investments in state-of-the-art equipment and simulation labs to create robust nursing programs that we can scale to offer four-year BSN degrees," she said. "Thus, this legislation provides a cost-effective way to expand the number of BSN nursing graduates in Colorado. Our colleges already educate and train high-quality registered nurses who greatly contribute to the health and well-being of their communities. Allowing us to offer bachelor of science degrees in nursing is the smart thing to do to address the overwhelming shortage of bachelor-prepared nurses."

The legislature agreed and passed HB 1086. Gov. John Hickenlooper, however, did not agree but did permit the bill to become law without his signature.

HB 1086 was born in Colorado Springs through discussions between Memorial Hospital and Pikes Peak Community College. CU officials testified against the measure when it was being heard in the House in February, and Colorado Mesa, Regis and Colorado Christian also expressed opposition.

Especially for officials at CU's School of Nursing and Anschutz Medical Center, the issue was "mission creep," but McCallin said the BSN program would clearly follow the community college system's mission of addressing workforce issues.

"We have made a number of compromises they felt were good," she said. "It limits us to doing RN-to-BSN completion programs as opposed to a traditional BSN, where a student goes to the same school for four years. We agreed that we'd accept into our BSN program only those who already had an RN.

"It's a much more detailed prescriptive process, which is something none of the other four-year nursing programs have to go through," she said. "It's to assure we did not compete with the four-year institutions, but it allows us to add capacity to the system."

The law applies only to the Colorado Community College system, the state's largest system of higher education, serving 137,000 students annually at 13 colleges and 39 locations across Colorado.

McCallin said she called Dr. Leah Bornstein, president of Aims Community College in Greeley, about being included in the legislation, but "she was not interested in being in the bill at this time. She felt what they had going with UNC was working well."

Aims partners with the University of Northern Colorado for its bachelor's in nursing program, said Laura Coale, executive director of communication and public information for Aims. Last spring saw the first graduating class from that collaboration, she said.

HB 1086 hit a snag in late February over what authority the Colorado Commission on Higher Education would have over the program. Colorado Mesa had backed a bill last year that stripped CCHE of its authority to approve new or modified degree programs, but this year lawmakers were urged to require community colleges to seek CCHE approval.

"I am a firm believer that market competition is essential to minimize costs and maximize benefits to Colorado's health-care consumers," said bill sponsor Rep. Paul Lundeen, R-Monument. "There's a demand for nurses with BSN degrees, and we should let the market respond. This policy will help level the playing field, and ensure that Colorado's nursing students have additional options for their education that are accessible and affordable."

A BETTER WAY TO TAKE CARE OF BUSINESS

You don't profit from sick employees. Why does your health provider?

In an industry built on fee-for-service care, Kaiser Permanente succeeds because we're built around prevention and the highest quality care. One Harvard Business Review article described our care as "untainted by any economic conflict of interest."* And an industry report by The Economist said we promote economy and quality care with "no financial motive to order unnecessary procedures."†

Choose better. Choose Kaiser Permanente.

* Lew McCreary, "Kaiser Permanente's Innovation on the Front Lines," Harvard Business Review, September 2010.

† "Another American Way," The Economist, May 1, 2010.
