Events large and small made easier thanks to Event Planning Guide

Who doesn't need help planning an event? At the Boulder County Business Report, we understand how much work goes into organization of events large and small. From selection of venues and caterers to hiring of video-production and audio-visual companies, from décor selection to trophies, floral and and décor, planning an event entails a lot of work — and a lot of research.

That's where the Event Planning Guide comes in handy. This publication, produced by the Boulder County Business Report, is designed to make planning an event just a little bit easier.

Included are articles highlighting event organization and promotion, selection of a venue and how to read the fine print of event contracts. We even touch on how to plan an event at the last minute.

PUBLISHER'S NOTEBOOK

Christopher Wood

Data is power, and this edition of the Event Planning Guide is a powerful tool indeed. Look through these pages for lists of Hotels & Accommodations in Boulder and Broomfield counties, as well as

Services, Catering Companies, Event Planners, Gift Baskets, Limousine & Shuttle Services, Photographers ... you name it.

All of that data is brought to you courtesy of Business Report researcher Beth Edwards, and I thank her for her efforts. Feel free to inform Beth of any errors or omissions — or to thank her for the accuracy of the data.

Thanks also to our production, editorial and advertising staffs for the hard work they put into this project. Most of all, however, thanks to our advertisers and you, our readers. Please contact me with ideas that you would like to see implemented in the next edition of the Event Planning Guide.

Enjoy!

Selecting the Spot

Best venue will be dictated by your goals, budget

news@bcbr.com

Choosing a venue for your event is the most critical part of your planning. Several things need to be considered. If you choose an area that is too large, it will look as if your event is not well attended. You also don't want to choose a venue that is too small.

The first thing people think about from the beginning is cost.

Don't be afraid to put on your negotiating cap. Sometimes, based on food and beverage revenue, you can bargain down the fee for the space.

Other key elements to consider are lighting staging, catering, entertainment and the venue's staff. The staff can make or break an event.

These tips are only a few things to consider in choosing the appropriate venue. Here is a check list on how to tackle event planning like a pro:

Identify and stick to the objective

• Before you make your first phone call or order nametags, answer these key questions:

- What is the purpose of the meeting? (reward performance, improve morale, educate, etc.)
- Does this meeting have a documented history? (If so, learn from it. If not, start one now.)
- What is the budget?
- Who will attend? (employees or employees and their families, etc.)
- Where will it be? (local or out of town)

Prepare request for proposal

Developing a request for proposal, or RFP, may take extra time, but it will save you headaches, hassles and sleepless nights in the long run. Also, research possible venues online, in the phone book or in local publications. Many event-planning Web sites offer sample RFPs; some will even send them for you.

Assess your top choice

Once you have narrowed down your responses, you will want to tour a facility (or two) and meet the venue's representative before making the final decision. Consider making this appointment at the same time of day on the same day of the week as the event. Take along pen, paper and measuring tape, and address the following (this assumes your event is indoors, but remember that outdoor venues are a creative alternative):

Venue

Image and appearance. Does it match your function goal?

Parking. Is it ample? Is there a fee?

Signage. Will the facility supply signage from entrance to function room?

Cleanliness. Insider tip: check bathrooms to discern facility's attention to detail.

Will a representative be available throughout the event, just in case?

Is a construction project scheduled near the time of your event?

Is a large group scheduled at the same time as your function?

How will you be affected?

Sleeping accommodations. If any guests will be staying overnight, ask to see a room.

Meeting room

How are the acoustics? You want to hear your speaker but not the one next door.

What floor plans have been successful for groups similar in size?

What are the audio-visual equipment capabilities?

Catering policy

What is the catering policy?

Cost

Request an itemized list of all costs.

Is there anything the list does not include that you must provide, such as security personnel?

What hours of rental are included, and how are extra hours billed?

Get it in writing

Professional event planners insist on contracts. The venue representative may encourage you to sign it on the spot, but pros recommend you review it carefully before signing. Here are some particulars your contract should contain:

A date guarantee.

Access times.

The cost itemization mentioned above.

All specifications outlined in RFP or discussed with representative.

Refund policy.

Experts recommend that you keep meticulous notes throughout the planning process. The next time you choose a facility, an event history will be an indispensable resource.

ADVANCE PLANNING

Early promotion, organization key to success

BY BUSINESS REPORT STAFF
news@bcbr.com

Making an event a success and one that people will remember requires some attention to detail.

If you've planned a similar event before, repeat what worked and eliminate what didn't. Otherwise, consider these tips.

Determine the goals and objectives of the event up front, and make sure they are clear before you start getting the word out. It's also a good idea to have a theme for the event.

Assess your needs. Write down what you are looking for in facility, food, transportation, audio-visual services and other needs. Also consider the age, gender and background of the attendees and who they will bring with them.

Create a list of things that need to be done and who is in charge of doing them. Check off each thing as it gets done.

Promotion is critical. You've got to make sure people know about the event and when it is. Make phone calls. Send out letters and invitations, pass out flyers or hang posters. Do whatever it takes to provide as much publicity as possible where it will be seen by the people who you want to attend.

Make sure the method you use for the promotion matches the audience you're trying to reach. If you're looking at a tech-savvy audience, you should send an e-mail and have an online-based registration.”

The event's promotion should also appeal to the intended audience.

Communicate with attendees beforehand so they come prepared. Use the Internet as a resource. You can use online registration, online site selection and Web research tools. Also, you can e-mail people information about the event.

Initial invitations should be sent out at least six months before the event so people can put it on their calendars.

Always plan well in advance. Ideally, a conference should be planned at least a year ahead of time. Conference centers and resorts book large events from one year to three years beforehand. It should be no less than about 18 months out. The reason for that is because the first thing to do is get the venue. Many venues are contracted that far in advance, and your options will be limited if you don't start planning and contract your venue that far out.

If you're organizing an in-house party or summer picnic, Atwood said to plan six months in advance.

Try using professional event planners because they can save you time and money. They know the right questions to ask and the tricks of the trade. They can also help with site inspection and selection.

As a general rule of thumb, if you're organizing an internal event such as an employee holiday party, expect 50 percent to 75 percent of the people you invite to show up.

Provide specific activities that attendees can participate in. Being actively involved at least part of the time is better than just sitting and listening.

Make sure the speakers and entertainment are visible to all attendees. Attendees should also not have any trouble hearing. Check well ahead of time to ensure that the microphones and other audio-visual equipment work.

Audio/visual is an extremely important element. There is a lot of preplanning involved, and you should set a time earlier in the day of the event to do a run through, so people know when to go up and down off stage and make sure the sound is good.

Comfort is also crucial. No one wants to sit for hours in an uncomfortable chair or be in an overcrowded room. Any time people experience discomfort, they focus on that as opposed to the event.

The facility needs to be the right size, not too big and not too small. Consider the room's lighting, layout and even the airflow and visuals when people walk in.

The event should not be too long or too short. An ideal time frame for a conference is two to three days. That way, people are not away from work or their office all week.

When the actual event is under way, if things aren't going as planned, improvise. Make the most with what you have to work with.

Know What You're Signing

In today's fast-paced world, a lot of communication is done via phone or e-mail. This is one time when you should meet in person with your event planner or caterer and go over the contract.

Study the contract's fine print to avoid surprises

When planning for an event – whether it be a corporate party or wedding – contracts between you and your event planners and caterers likely will need to be signed.

In the rush to organize the event, don't forget to go over these contracts with the service providers and read the fine print.

Here are some things to watch for in an event contract, as explained by some area caterers and event planners.

The small details matter

Everyone has a different idea on how things should be done at an event. Make sure the contract includes things not as obvious as menus, but, for example, include what time the food should be served, how it should be served, etc. Late food can turn a hungry and impatient crowd into a tizzy. Also, some caterers will allow customers to add customized requests, so that both parties know what is expected.

Are the prices guaranteed?

Food, flowers and other material prices can fluctuate quickly. Make sure if you're planning way ahead for the event, that the prices today will be the same at the time of the event. If it's not written into the contract, don't let a caterer pass on the prices on when the prices increase.

Changes in food, attendance

Be aware of deadlines when you can last make changes to the contract, such as how many guests will be attending or changes in the menu. For example, be sure to let the caterer know how many vegetarian plates are needed. Check to make sure how many days prior to the event you are allowed to make changes without incurring a late or change fee. Most caterers try to be flexible, but remember they have a budget as well and last-minute changes could put a dent in their profit margin and usually have clauses in their contracts to address them.

Deposits and fees

Be aware of deadlines when you can last cancel the event and avoid losing a lot of money. Most catering and event companies will require a nonrefundable deposit. Others will also require a nonrefundable down payment if the event is canceled closer to the day of the event.

Location matters

Depending on whether you chose an onsite location at a restaurant or catering company to service the event off site, there will be a significant price difference. Onsite restaurant events tend to be set in cost based on the number of people being served. For off-site events, the prices can vary. For example, with higher fuel costs, the prices to transport people and materials to an off-site venue and costs could change. Make sure how fluctuating prices will be handled.

Meet in person

In today's fast-paced world, a lot of communication is done via phone or e-mail. This is one time when you should meet in person with your event planner or caterer, especially if this is the first time you are using them. It's important to meet with them face-to-face, and try not to let personality clashes distract from the goal of a great event.

Planning on the FLY

Stay calm, flexible, focus on your event's goal

BY BUSINESS REPORT STAFF
news@bcbr.com

Whether you have a few weeks or a few days to plan an event, last-minute event planning isn't impossible. You can handle it.

While stress can be high when planning on the fly, here's a few of tips for planning a last-minute event.

Know the basics

Why are you having the event? What style of event will it be? Who is your intended audience? If you can answer those three questions, you're on the right track. Consider this:

Demographics: Are you targeting family and friends, co-workers, business contacts, the media or the general public? And remember to be realistic on how many people will attend — not how many you are inviting.

With today's technology, details often can be taken care of successfully even when you think time is running out.

Nature of the event: Are you trying to network, launch a product, announce a merger, celebrate a grand opening or educate the community?

Jeans or black tie: Are you hoping to have a backyard barbecue with guests clad in jeans and T-shirts or are you thinking of an chic masquerade with tuxedos and evening gowns?

It all will tie into your budget.

Get the logistics

After deciding upon the basics of event planning, the first action step is to figure out when you want your event and where. Consider this:

Date and time: Do you want to host an event midweek, on the weekend, in the morning, or perhaps all day? Is it crunch time and you want the event in three days or are you planning it a few weeks out?

Venue: Do you need a permit and tent for a party in the park, a partitioned ballroom with elegant tables for a retirement party or something in between?

Finding the venue needs to be the first call you make.

Show me the money

While planning a last-minute event can save money under some circumstances (an empty venue or unreserved caterer may want the business), charges and rush fees are often passed to the customer. Consider this:

- Food and drink: While good caterers can often get food quickly if they have at least two days notice, anything less than that is typically considered a rush order which will cost more. Depending on the size of the event, consider a restaurant that caters or choose to dine in.

Budget: Know what you have to work with in terms of finances, and be flexible if you have to adjust your budget accordingly.

Spread the word

Your contacts list and your time until the event will often determine how you spread the word about your function. Consider this:

More than a week: If you have a few weeks and a good mailing list, send invites via snail mail because it's more formal albeit more expensive.

Less than a week: If you're a few days out, send e-mails or e-vites and follow it with a phone call. It's less formal, but it's fast and cheap.

It's always good to send something via mail, but you can always back it up with other methods.

Emphasize what counts

Think of the events you've attended recently. What stuck out as really good or really bad? Typically, Jaeger said, it comes down to a handful of topics that can make or break an event. Consider this:

Was there enough to eat and drink and was it good?

Were the bathrooms easily accessible, clean and functional?

What did guests get for free (for instance a CD, T-shirt or pen set)?

Flexibility

The key to planning an event on the fly is to be flexible. Don't have your mind set on the best venue or caterer that's always booked because they're probably booked. One thing some event planners like about last minute events is that people are forced to make a decision and stick with it. So do that. Time is against you, but make the most of it. You'll need to stay calm, and at this stage of the process it would be wise to call an event planner either for a consultation or to have him do the work.
