Times Like These Call for a Conversation with CFS.

Conventional wisdom says the older you get, the more conservative you should be with your investments. Sound advice – for older generations. But with people now living longer, you could spend a third of your life in retirement, and the reduced earnings power of a more conservative portfolio could mean outliving your assets.

The good news is, there are retirement solutions available today that weren't around for earlier generations – innovations that can help you grow and protect your savings.

Elevations Credit Union is offering a complimentary, no-cost, and no-obligation financial consultation with one of our qualified advisors through CUSO Financial Services, L.P. (CFS). We invite you to take advantage of this complimentary service.

What worries boomers most

BY KATE HAWTHORNE | KHAWTHORNE@NCBR.COM

It's not death and taxes, but close — health and outliving your money

Hey there, friend, you say your inbox is full of spam about how reverse mortgages can fund your retirement years, but the only thing going in reverse is the value of your house? And gas, food and the light bill are taking more of your monthly check, but your personal net worth has sunk lower than your cholesterol number? And the doctor said if you can still afford the Lipitor, you'll last a good, long time — about two years longer than your retirement account? Is that what's troubling you, Bunky?

Well, you're not alone, according to the cheery folks at the Society of Actuaries, based in Chicago. Money and health are at the top of the list of most significant concerns for those ages 45 to 80 in the SOA's most recent Risks and Process of Retirement Survey.

Among retirees, the top five concerns were inflation (57 percent expressed significant concern); affording long-term care (52 percent); affording adequate health care (51 percent) and maintaining a reasonable standard of living (48 percent).

Pre-retirees had a different take on their most worrisome issues. Affording adequate health care topped the list for 69 percent of the younger respondents; inflation and affording long-term care tied at 63 percent, and maintaining a reasonable standard of living concerned 55 percent.

Anna Rappaport, chair of the SOA's committee on post-retirement, said the retirement risk survey started in 1995 to gather data on how to most effectively use the funds people had saved for retirement.

"Until then, the entire focus of retirement planning was on building it up, not on using it in retirement," Rappaport, a 2004 retiree, said. "We found people had lots of questions about how to manage their money in retirement, how to make it last and how to protect it against a long list of risks."

Men and women differed on what worried them, but mostly by degrees. While 62 percent of women — both pre- and already retired — expressed significant concern about inflation, only 51 percent of men did. Likewise for affording long-term care, which worried 57 percent of women but only 47 percent of men; health-care costs perturbed 56 percent of women, 45 percent of men; depleting savings gnawed at 52 percent of women, 37 percent of men; and affording to stay in their home agitated 44 percent of women, 29 percent of men.

Before jumping to the conclusion that men just aren't paying attention, consider that according to the actuaries, average life expectancy for American men 65 and older is 17 years, 20 years for women. Almost 20 percent of men but 30 percent of women age 65 today can expect to live to 90 years old.

Add to that the death of a spouse is accompanied by a decline in their standard of living for many women, on top of a period of widowhood lasting 15 years or more.

♣ See Worries, 7B

❖ Worries from 6B

So, like everything else, retirement is different for girls. But, according to Rappaport, the decision-making process is distressingly similar for everyone.

“We found, even among those with a significant amount of money available for retirement, their focus was always short term, not more than five years ahead. The attitude was, ‘Well, if something comes up, we’ll deal with it then,’” she said. “Thinking about what could happen in the future is scary stuff for a lot of people.”

Financial literacy key

This short-term thinking among baby boomers is part of the overall problem of a lack of financial literacy in the United States, as well as the profound changes that have occurred in retirement itself.

“Their parents relied on Social Security checks and payouts from defined benefit pension plans, which have mostly gone away,” Rappaport said. “Those approaching retirement age don’t understand how compound interest works – it’s like a foreign language.”

Of course, by the time you reach retirement age, compound interest isn’t as much of a friend to your 401(k) or IRA investments as it was back in the day when everyone told you to save a little bit out of each paycheck, put it in an interest-bearing account and fuggedaboutit. Those of us who took that advice during the Nixon Administration are probably better capitalized now than those of us who only started saving when we saw Bill Clinton turn 60.

Whatever your age now, the first thing Rappaport recommends is to get a handle on your potential expected resources. Is your retirement plan on track? Or is there a possibility that you might have to work past full retirement age of 65 – or 67, depending on where you fall on the Social Security benefit continuum? If so, keep your skills up to date, unless you aspire to hand carts to Wal Mart shoppers.

You should also keep the beneficiaries on your life insurance, disability insurance and wills up to date as you change jobs, move residences or add or subtract members of the family.

You should plan your finances both as a couple, if you are married, and for the contingency that either or both of you could spend your retirement years single, through death or divorce. The best approach is to find a professional adviser who can develop a plan that benefits you both and balances the risks with the rewards of retirement.

And what if you are a couple, but not married, a situation not uncommon among boomers both gay and straight? Especially if there are children involved somewhere, if you are pooling expenses and planning to live on the assets you are accumulating together in retirement, it is critically important to get it all in writing. Then consult an attorney to make sure your plans will hold up in the future, whatever happens.

How boomers manage retirement risk

Boomers find pen is mightier than the rocking chair

BY LUANNE KADLUB | NEWS@NCBR.COM

Patricia Stoltey worked in accounting and accounts payable management for grocery chains and big corporations in Florida until she and her husband retired to Fort Collins.

That's when she found time to do the one thing she really enjoys: writing. "I've always wanted to write. I attended writers' conferences and workshops and did some writing, but I didn't submit much. Suddenly I have all this extra time, so I decided to apply myself a little bit," she said.

Stoltey is among a growing number of baby boomers and retirees who are taking up writing — anything and everything. Mysteries. Romance. Nonfiction. Memoirs. Some are published. Many others write just for their families.

Because writing can be a lonely vocation, avocation or hobby, writers often seek out ways to network among themselves. And thanks to Kerrie Flanagan they have that in Northern Colorado Writers. Flanagan founded the organization about a year ago and now more than 120 members from Cheyenne to Parker meet one or more times each month for workshops, programs, coffee and sometimes critiques.

"I try to give the writers in the organization as many tools as possible to get out there and get published," said Flanagan, a freelance writer and publicist.

Statistically speaking, the chances of that happening are not encouraging. Ninety-eight percent of all manuscripts are turned down, according to AuthorHouse, a provider of publishing and marketing services for authors. And according to Bowker, which specializes in bibliographic information management, there were 276,649 new book titles and editions published in 2007. "On-demand" and short-run books, however, which the company tabulates separately, pushes that number to 411,422.

Flanagan said she didn't know what to expect in terms of membership when she started the writers group. About half the members fit the baby boomer and/or retiree description. "Once they're retired and the kids are out of the house, they have more time to write," she said.

That's pretty much Stoltey's story. After moving to Fort Collins, she finished a fiction manuscript she and her brother wrote "many years ago" about the transportation industry. It was accepted by Books in Motion, an audiobook publisher.

"After that I got more serious," said Stoltey, a mystery writer whose "The Prairie Grass Murders" was published in 2007 by Five Star Publishing. "Most of the setting is in Illinois, but the protagonist is in south Florida."

The second in the series will be published in September 2009. Stoltey said Five Star markets directly to libraries, so getting good reviews is important. Unfortunately, she added, "It's luck of the draw" if it's reviewed by one of the top four library book reviewers that most libraries look to for new book choices.

Now she's contemplating whether to write a third book in the mystery series or try something different. Writing a book from start to finish, she said, takes her about seven months to complete, provided she puts in four hours a day.

Fun with serious memoirs

For Paul Nordwall, who retired early from the U.S. Forest Service, where he oversaw the 1.2 million-acre Caribou National Forest in Idaho and lobbied for wilderness legislation in Washington, D.C., writing is something he always dabbled in over the years.

"When I was taking care of my parents, who lived in the Denver area, I was driving back and forth and did quite a bit of writing,

What different active retirement lifestyle options require today

BY NOAH GUILLAUME | NGUILLAUME@NCBR.COM

Retirement?

That word is so old. Long gone are the days of spending your post-working days in front of the television. Retirees today are instead opting for an active lifestyle. Leaving the old 9-to-5 is now a time to start the second part of your life, not wait to conclude the first.

But as the idea of what retirement means shifts, so are the resources need to achieve that ideal. With the lagging economy and increasing health-care costs, some people are finding their nest eggs coming up short. In that case, rather than extend their time at the grind, they're shifting their retirement dreams into a more affordable gear.

While no two retirement dreams are the same, most include some sort of travel and outdoor activities. If you're willing to entertain alternatives, not all dreams are outside the realm of possibility.

RECREATIONAL VEHICLE

Benefit programs can balance work, elder care commitments

BY JANE ALBRITTON
NEWS@NCBR.COM

In these tight economic times, companies are under constant pressure to retain top talent, and creative employee benefits become more important. As apparently ageless baby boomers arrive at the 65+ mark — by 2030, one in five Americans is projected to be age 65 or older — demand is increasing a new employee benefit: elder care.

“Employees must balance work commitments and family-care responsibilities,” said Cindy Carrillo, founder and CEO of backup care provider Work Options Group, based in Superior. “Over the past three or four years, we have seen a growing interest on the part of employers for elder care.”

Already a significant number of large Colorado-based companies, including Hunter Douglas Window Fashions, Roche Pharmaceuticals and Qwest, have signed on for the Work Options Group backup care benefit, as has the University of Denver.

“There are also national companies, such as Merrill Lynch, Janus Capital Group and Microsoft, who have employees in the state,” said Heather Hope, public relations manager for Work Options Group. “Those employees are eligible for the backup care benefit.”

Affordable help

She explained some of the factors driving demand for her company’s services. “People are staying in the workforce longer, people are living longer and their desire to remain independent is putting more pressure on family members to provide care and support.”

Hope noted that while most backup care right now involves children, around 15 percent to 20 percent of requests involve adult or elder care.

Nancy Driskill, MS, RN, owner of Consultants for Aging Families in Fort Collins, assists older individuals and their families plan for and adjust to the changes and stages of aging.

“I have been wondering when elder care as a benefit was going to come up,” she said. “It is surely something folks are looking for. Those who want to stay in their own homes and be safe and comfortable have difficulty finding affordable help.”

Private care is expensive (roughly $20 per hour with a two-hour minimum), and finding qualified, reliable, trustworthy caregivers on a moment’s notice may prove to be risky business.

On the other hand, as an employee benefit, backup care is structured like insurance and caregivers are fully vetted by the provider. For a few dollars a month, the employer provides the option to everyone in the company.

“A typical program provides 80 to 100 hours of care per year at a highly subsidized price of $4 per hour,” Hope said. “It does not matter to the employer who needs the care. It might be a child, a parent, a spouse or Great Aunt Sally. The goal of the program is to make it possible for care to be delivered to the dependent person and to give the employee the freedom to continue working.”

In Driskill’s view, the appeal of such a plan is its simplicity.

“We need to do it cleanly and neatly without layers of regulation,” she said.

Good economic sense

The elder care benefit makes economic sense for employers. According to the National Alliance for Caregiving, family members spend an average of 22 hours per week providing care to their elderly relatives. Presumably, not all those hours take place outside the working day. So if a company supplies 10,000 hours of care in a year, those are 10,000 hours of productivity not lost to unscheduled absenteeism.

“It’s tough to compartmentalize work and home,” Hope said. “And companies are realizing that it is not realistic to ask people to separate personal and professional lives. We expect a lot of employees, so it’s important to give them the support they need to do their jobs well.”

Elder care by the numbers

44 million Number of Americans engaged in the care of an older family member.

15-25 Percent of workforce now caring for disabled family members.

30-50 Percent of workforce expected to be caring for disabled family members by 2010.

60 Percent of employed caregivers who have made work-related adjustments to provide care.

10 Percent reduced hours to part-time from full-time.

9 Percent have left the workplace entirely.

$33 billion Annual cost to U.S. business from lost productivity of working caregivers.

$2,110 Annual cost to employers per caregiver.

$5-$12 Annual cost per employee to provide elder care benefits.

How to maintain what you live for

Enjoyable, sustainable retirement requires early financial planning

As a well-paid corporate executive, you might think that shifting into retirement will be a breeze.

But even with enough money to retire, there are some concerns facing corporate execs, which can turn that calm breeze into choppy gusts. For a smoother ride, be prepared to do some planning two to three years before you retire.

One of the biggest issues for a corporate executive is what to do with your large position in the company stock or stock options. Just like any other stock, owning a large position in a single stock is risky business. It leaves you with an unbalanced portfolio, and subject to wild swings.

Look at the standard deviation of your portfolio with and without the large position in the company stock. There are techniques to hedge your large position by using stock options and equity collars. These methods can become complicated and usually require the assistance of an investment professional and accountant.

Company stock options such as ISOs (incentive stock options) or NQSOs (non-qualified stock options) are even more risky because of the leverage factor.

Here's an example to explain the leverage factor. Suppose you own 1,000 stock options that are vested and the option price is $20 per share with a current stock price of $40. When the stock price is $40, your options are worth $20,000.

Suppose the stock drops $10 per share overnight (a gap opening — where the stock trades at $40 the previous day, bad news comes out and the first trade the next day is $30). The value of your options is now $10,000 which is equal to a 50 percent drop.

If you owned 500 shares outright at $40 per share, your investment would be worth $20,000 but if the stock dropped to $30 per share your investment would be worth $15,000 or a drop of 25 percent.

You can see how the same $10 per share drop is magnified in the option example versus the stock example.

Diversify portfolio

All corporate executives are passionate about their company stock, but people in general are talking about different stocks, which collectively make up the market as a whole. Looking at your entire investment portfolio, you should create a plan to diversify your large position two to three years before you retire, so when the time comes to retire, your plans are not derailed because the stock has dropped. Coordinate your plan to diversify with your wealth adviser, accountant and your company's compliance department.

GUEST OPINION
Robert J. Pyle

Another topic is how to make the seamless transition to retirement. In other words, how will you create your "paycheck" in retirement?

The first thing you should do is begin to consolidate your assets so everything isn't scattered all over the place. Next, figure out how much money you need to live on in retirement and make sure your "withdrawal" rate is reasonable. Create a diversified portfolio that will provide the sustainable withdrawal rate.

Again, coordinate with your wealth adviser and accountant to design a plan to withdraw money from your different accounts on a tax efficient basis. Rebalance your portfolio as you periodically withdraw your money.

Financial issues aside, possibly the hardest question to answer for corporate executives is what to do with your free time. Frequently, your job has become your identity. In fact, as we saw last year at Coors Field, in the major league baseball playoffs the slogan is "I live for this."

What do you live for? Why do you work and earn money? So you can (fill in the blank). This is something you should begin thinking about two to three years before you retire.

Finally, know that it is possible to create a sustainable, enjoyable retirement.

mostly with the notion that I would leave some legacy for my children and grandchildren in the form of a memoir," he said.

When he's not substitute teaching, Nordwall said he tries to work on his memoir for an hour or two at a time. "I use my laptop as a glorified typewriter," he said. "It's a thousand pages of just writing. Like a diary. It's dull. I'm still searching for a way to start putting it together."

He might want to take a look at "Writing Your Life: An Easy-to-Follow Guide to Writing an Autobiography" by Mary Borg, a history professor at the University of Northern Colorado who has shepherded countless students, mostly retirees, in writing their memoirs. She currently teaches the class through the Greeley Recreation Center.

For a class schedule for the Greeley Recreation Center, call 970-350-9400.

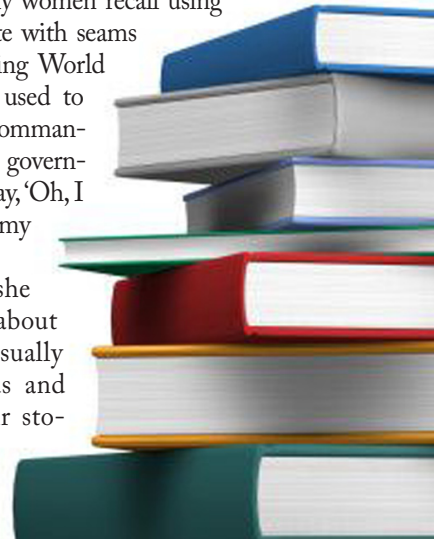

Interest in writing memoirs goes back to when Alex Haley's "Roots" hit the bestseller lists, she said. "As that became so important in American culture, it woke people up to the fact that we each have a wonderful story to tell and a responsibility to tell that story to our families," Borg said. "Added to that fact is we don't have storytellers in our families anymore. Our families have become the global world of television. We know more of what's going on in 'The Simpsons' and 'Grey's Anatomy' than who our aunts and uncles are."

And, she added, people are finding that writing their memories is fun. "It's fun to spend a little time every week with memories, with the past. People will say they didn't do much, can't remember much. It's stunningly apparent that everyone has a unique life and has done wonderful things," Borg added.

Getting to those stories is Borg's task as teacher. She breaks her class into three segments: not being born — focusing on ancestors; being born and growing up — moving out of the family home, starting a career, becoming involved in the community, marrying and having a family; and reflection — making sense out of your life.

Taking a class in memoir writing, Borg said, is no different than taking an exercise class. In this case, however, they're writing to be read by other class members. It also helps others in the class remember similar things. Many women recall using leg makeup — complete with seams down the back — during World War II because nylon used to make stockings was commandeered by the federal government. "Somebody will say, 'Oh, I forgot to write that in my story,'" Borg said.

Her students, she added, are "buzzed about doing this. They're usually prodded by their kids and grandkids to tell their stories. As they get into this, then they get really enthusiastic."

❖ Friends from 12B

Driskill said that she has observed a growing awareness by employers that elder care issues may be affecting their employees.

"I have recently had some clients whose employers have said, 'If you need guidance, we will provide assistance for elder care advising,'" she said. "But in my field, we have seen little support for actual care, and for people who are trying to work, care is a worry."

According to the National Study of the Changing Workforce published in 2002, "when more supportive work-life policies and practices are available, employees exhibit more positive work outcomes: job satisfaction, commitment to employer and retention, as well as more positive life outcomes: less interference between job and family life, less negative spillover from job to home, greater life satisfaction, and better mental health."

The report also notes that more than 35 percent of employees care for a relative 65 years or older. The operative word in this statistic is "employees," an indicator of a general shift in the role of family and community in caring for the young or infirm.

Sandwich duties

One result of the change in social norms, as reported by the Society for Human Resource Management, is both the growth in the number of employees with elder care responsibilities and the growth of the number of employees with both child care and elder care responsibilities. A 2008 SHRM benefits report indicated the needs for child care tend to go down over time, while the needs for elder care go up with life expectancy, which continues to rise in a long-running trend.

disease, cancer and stroke — keeps declining, life expectancy will just keep right on rising.

These numbers hold some significance for Colorado. If retirees continue to relocate here, often to be close to children and grandchildren, the need for easy access to backup care will grow. Assuming that the economy does not go in the tank permanently, the need for corporate sponsored backup care is likely to increase. Great Aunt Sally is counting on it.

Wyoming AARP contest helps 50+ crowd bee sharp

BY DENNIS E. CURRAN
DCURRAN@WYOMING.COM

When Larry Grossman correctly spelled the word “debouch” last June, the 56-year-old North Dakota high school teacher won the highly coveted honor of being the nation’s top speller over age 50.

Grossman’s triumph came in the AARP The Magazine’s National Spelling Bee, formerly the AARP National Senior Spelling Bee, a unique national event for men and women aged 50 and over held in Cheyenne every summer.

For his talents in spelling “debouch” (which means to come forth, to emerge), Grossman got to appear on national television and participate in AARP’s 50th anniversary celebration.

The spelling bee fits right into AARP’s agenda for adults 50+ to maintain healthy bodies and minds as they age. AARP, formerly known as the American Association of Retired Persons, now just goes by its initials because more than half its members are still working.

“We encourage people to keep their bodies and minds sharp by exercising and by reading and learning new words,” says Rita Inoway, Wyoming director for AARP. “Some people do word games, they do Sudoku, they do crossword puzzles, and some people do spelling.”

The spelling bee was founded in 1996 by Cheyenne AARP members who wanted to challenge the 50+ community to keep their minds sharp. Over the years, it has grown into a highly competitive and challenging event attracting adult spellers from all over the country and Canada. It is open to anyone age 50 or older, except previous winners.

Joanne Bowlby, Wyoming AARP’s communications director, said the spellers are excited to be in a national event. “One of the spellers stood up at last year’s spelling bee and said, ‘This is our senior moment, this is our time to shine.’”

Grossman, who lives in Northwood, N.D., edged Michael Petrina Jr., 63, of Arlington, Va., for the title, with spellers from Tennessee, California and Oregon rounding out the top five. The top Wyoming finisher was Kent Stockton, 66, of Riverton, who tied for ninth with Sandy Marvin, 60, of Littleton, Colo., and several others.

Word of mouth

Inoway said the national spelling bee has grown from involving mostly Cheyenne area residents to a truly national event mostly by word of mouth.

“There were quite a few retired educators in that chapter, and some of them had probably helped young spellers when they were teaching, and they were probably quite good spellers themselves,” she said.

Added Bowlby, “Neither of us were here in Wyoming in 1996, but the notes we have from the founding members said they thought this would be a fun way to challenge their peers to keep their minds sharp.”

“Some of the first participants from out of state were relatives and friends of people from Cheyenne, and then as it grew, they began to get winners from other states,” Inoway said.

Wyoming AARP got involved when it opened a state office in 2001, but the event still has an all-volunteer board of directors that chooses the spelling words.

♣ Word from 18B

Contestants have hailed from Portland, Maine, to San Diego and from Miami to Vancouver, British Columbia. Last June there were 49 contestants, age 51 to 75 and representing 24 states.

“The vast majority of them have to pay their own way,” Bowlby said, and many turn the trip into a family vacation.

Many longtime competitors are friends and enjoy the social aspects of the bee. In June, for example, the spellers visited the award-winning Laramie County Library, where the Cheyenne Little Theatre Players presented an original skit about spelling bees.

All business

Once the competition starts, however, the spellers are all business.

“They’re very motivated,” Inoway said, “and their knowledge of words is amazing. They’ve created a community of spellers and have a national network of people who spell together. They are fascinated by words, and their depth and knowledge of words is just astounding. Most of them are very well read.”

Most of the contestants are baby boomers who are still working, according to Bowlby.

“Most of them have competed in a spelling bee before, and they can tell you THE word they missed and when they missed it,” she said. “One woman even told us what she was wearing. She was wearing a green jumper that she’d never wear again.”

All contestants take a 100-word written spelling test in the morning, and the top 15 get to participate in an oral spelling bee in the afternoon. Unlike student bees, senior contestants get three misses before they are knocked out. This year’s oral bee lasted more than four hours.

Inoway said many of the spellers are professional people — doctors, lawyers, ministers — “people who really like words.”

One winner was a mathematician, musician and computer scientist, and he combined those talents to train for the bee. “He recorded the words he studied all year and as he jogged and exercised, he focused on the words he didn’t know,” Inoway said.

One of the delights of the competition is to see a speller who has never participated in a local or state bee to come to Cheyenne and win it all, they said.

“And that’s exactly what happened with this year’s winner,” Bowlby said. “He said he entered because he had never had had the opportunity to be in a spelling bee and wanted to try it and didn’t want to miss out on that opportunity of a lifetime.”

As the event grows, there is some talk of moving it from Cheyenne, but the local supporters would like to see it stay in Wyoming’s capital city.

“We’ve had a lot of interest from corporate entities that want to sponsor the bee but then they want to move it,” Bowlby said. “We’ve really been trying to keep it here, where the birthplace of the bee is, and keep it a local event that’s a national event.”

*T*here comes a time when home isn't just a place to come for the holidays.

A home is full of memories, a part of your life and your parents'. But it also may be a place they now struggle to maintain. Moving is not an easy subject to bring up, for you or them. Good Samaritan Society—Communities of Northern Colorado can help with that conversation. We'll help you understand what senior living options are available, how your parents can be free to do what they want and feel a real sense of belonging.

To receive a free brochure to help you begin this conversation, call 888-GSSCARE.
