Know Your Risk:

- Are you at least 50 years or older?
- Are you of African-American or Ashkenazi Jewish heritage?
- Has a doctor ever told you that you have inflammatory bowel disease, ulcerative colitis, or Crohn's disease?
- Has one of your parents, or brother, sister or child had colon cancer or colon polyps?
- Do you smoke or use other tobacco products?
- Are you physically inactive – not getting enough exercise?
- Do you often eat red meat?

If you answered yes to any of these questions, you are at increased risk for colon cancer.

The Entrepreneur BOOM

Study suggests you're never too old to roll up your sleeves, chase a dream

BY RYAN DIONNE
rdionne@bcbr.com

Whether it's personal drive, financial security or unhappiness about their current job, when it comes to the number of people starting their own business, baby boomers carry the weight.

The current boomers, people 45 to 63 years old, are in the age group with the highest percentage of entrepreneurs, according to a study. With a variety of personal reasons, people born between 1946 and 1964 are branching out to start anew.

"Contrary to popularly held assumptions, it turns out that over the past decade or so, the highest rate of entrepreneurial activity belongs to the 55-64 age group," according to a Kansas City-based Ewing Marion Kauffman Foundation study. "The 20-34 age bracket, meanwhile, ... has the lowest rate."

Reggie Kellum, a 46-year-old Fort Collins entrepreneur, is among the generation that left a stable job to pursue a lifelong dream.

"I will only go back when my last penny is spent," Kellum said regarding his life in the corporate world.

Despite the longer hours, the stress and the irregular paycheck, nothing compares to setting his own schedule, controlling his finances and waking up in the morning ready to work, he said.

"For me, and for all that I have spoken to, it does not compare to the joy we get from owning our own business," Kellum said.

Evidently, he's not alone.

Sharon King, director of the Boulder Small Business Development Center, said she and her staff help many boomers, like Kellum, who are creating their own businesses based on what they did with a previous employer – whether that be technology or finance related or nearly anything else.

Richard Eastis, a 50-year-old former information systems finance operations manager who lost his job in May when the company he worked for went out of business, plans to start his own financial business.

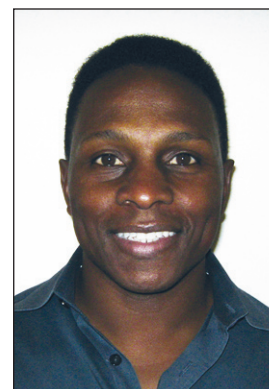

With 23 years of experience at one company, Eastis faced a crossroads: Find a new job or start his own company. He chose to pursue both.

In addition to networking and job-searching through traditional means, Eastis is planning to use his finance and tax experience to start his own financial business.

"I've kind of always had a little bit of an itch to do that and to help people," he said. Though he admitted that becoming an entrepreneur was just as much about an itch as it was being forced to find a new job.

For Kellum, it was a longtime dream to be his own boss. He was tired of working really hard for moderate compensation. Plus, he wanted to help people.

That's why in September he opened a Mathnasium, a math learning center franchise, in Fort Collins. It's a way for him to "The startup process is probably the hardest thing I've ever been through."

Kellum quit his job at Agilent Technologies in 2001, worked a few sales jobs to gain marketing experience, and eventually opened his current venture.

But it's not an easy task for Eastis or Kellum.

“The startup process is probably the hardest thing I've ever been through,” Kellum said.

Both men started gaining much-needed startup experience before launching his business. Kellum went into sales, an imperative aspect to any business, and Eastis moonlighted as a tax preparer and shadowed his parents' tax businesses before deciding to move forward.

“It may sound good ... but you really need to do your research,” Eastis said.

Whether that research is moonlighting to increase your knowledge, attending entrepreneurial classes, networking or seeking help from organizations like small business development centers, every little bit helps.

Keeping your estate organized

Software helps track key financial documents, priceless memorabilia

BY RYAN DIONNE

Staff Writer

When someone dies, the executor, or personal representative, must compile legal paperwork and help distribute financial assets, personal belongings, priceless memorabilia, and more.

Many of the tasks must be completed within a given amount of time to meet governmental requirements.

The job is simplified if the deceased has a will, and everything is compiled in an organized fashion. But that's often not the case, according to Executor's Resource Inc.

"The vast majority of people die without a will," said Myra Salzer, founder of Louisville-based Executor's Resource. "So the executor is totally caught off guard. They are completely ill prepared, and it's something they've never done before."

The company helps people organize their estate and keep everything in one centralized location – the Internet.

While many families shy away from the "D" word, death is a part of life that should be discussed.

"It's a hard thing to do, but ... just say, 'I don't know who you plan to have as your executor, but you should have a conversation with that person,'" Salzer said.

The company's product – Estate Logic – is a software as a service designed to help people organize their estate information.

"With a great focus on today's volatile market, clients may be overlooking an even larger uncertainty that lies ahead," said Skip Rapp, the company's chief executive officer.

With EstateLogic, families can upload documents to a secure Web site, complete forms, document important phone numbers or other pertinent postmortem information and update it as needed.

"We're not trying to be a place where you manage your daily assets," Rapp said. "We're trying to provide ... one location where all this stuff comes together."

That one location is incredibly secure, said Carlin Dornbusch, the company's chief technology officer.

ESTATE, from 8

"Our client's privacy is of utmost importance," Dornbusch said.

Between tiered securities involving numerous firewalls and encrypted data and a security rating equal to that of many banks, Dornbusch said people shouldn't be concerned.

"If anything it's probably more reliable than a lot of things out there," he said. "It's more reliable than your laptop that you might carry around."

Executor's Resource also has a team of security experts that periodically try to infiltrate the system to find potential weak points. Even if someone did hack into the system, Dornbusch said most of the information stored is not sensitive.

The company doesn't require Social Security numbers, account numbers or sensitive files. Instead people can store the physical location of those critical components so, upon death, the executor can find them. Each page within the site is encrypted and secure.

"All pages are secured, so your keystrokes are encrypted from your keyboard all the way into our database," Dornbusch said.

The service, which can be obtained individually or through financial planners, insurance companies and more, ranges from $100 to $260 depending on the type of service. It's more expensive for a person to sign up individually than with a firm.

Sheryl Garrett, a certified financial planner and founder of Shawnee Mission, Kan.-based The Garrett Planning Network Inc., signed a distribution agreement with Executor's Resource.

"I think of this as being a huge gift to people," Garrett said.

The accessibility is one aspect of the software she thinks clients can use because an executor and loved one are often in different areas of the country and don't know where important documents are stored.

Being a software as a service, it's easy for the company to introduce new features or upgrade old ones with little or no work by the customer.

"This is a living, breathing software. It's constantly being updated and improved – new features are being added," Rapp said.

Boomers get a break for long-term care

I'm from the Internal Revenue Service and I'm here to help you. Gov. Ritter promotes the Colorado Partnership Plan as a package of incentives to encourage the purchase of approved long-term care policies.

What's going on here? How can you believe in governments offering lower taxes when they are spending money they don't have and projecting big deficits?

We all know that Social Security funding is scheduled to go into reverse in a few years; Medicare is a rapidly growing percentage of both the federal and state budgets; but did you realize that Medicaid expenditures are increasing fastest of all? And demographers can confidently forecast a surge in needs as the generation born between 1946 and 1964 reaches retirement age and will be at risk of becoming dependent on others for maintaining lifestyles.

We all want to enjoy independence and personal comfort as long as it is possible and affordable. Long term care insurance seemed to be a logical alternative to living with our children or depleting our savings; even possibly being unable to keep the home and the accustomed standard of living.

After 20 years of slow acceptance of the proposal of long-term care insurance, we understand some of the principal reasons for reluctance to spend money now for coverage of an uncertain risk. Of course, it is also true that we purchase auto and home policies and hope we never have a claim, but this is much more personal; more like life and health protection.

Frequent objections are stated as Medicare will take care of me; I am sure that I will not need it; and, besides, it's just too much money right now. The government programs currently offered include educational efforts to dispel these beliefs, including public forums, letters to voters, and free information kits, available on the Internet at ColoradoltcPartnership.org or by calling toll-free 1-866-752-6582, the U. S. Department of Health and Human Services.

It is true that Medicare will help temporarily under certain conditions when you are discharged from the hospital, including skilled nursing services; not when there is a chronic condition needing continuing assistance with the activities of daily living, such as eating, bathing, dressing or transporting.

Denial of need is false; most people 65 or older will need help at some time in life, whether in the home or services in a communal setting.

The issue of cost is more complicated and is often justified. Financial planners generally advise that the wealthy can take the risk of a sudden rise in living costs and may logically self-insure themselves. Those who do not have enough income or assets for a secure retirement will have to hope to qualify for Medicaid and the availability of facilities near friends and relatives.

GUEST OPINION

The purchase of a long-term care policy, or joint policy for a couple, is often recommended when there is a probability that the assets and income will be above the poverty level, requiring a spend-down to receive government aid.

This reduces the legacy for family members and may even result in sale of the principal residence whenever the spouse leaves, as the state attempts to recapture the expenses of Medicaid support provided for the deceased.

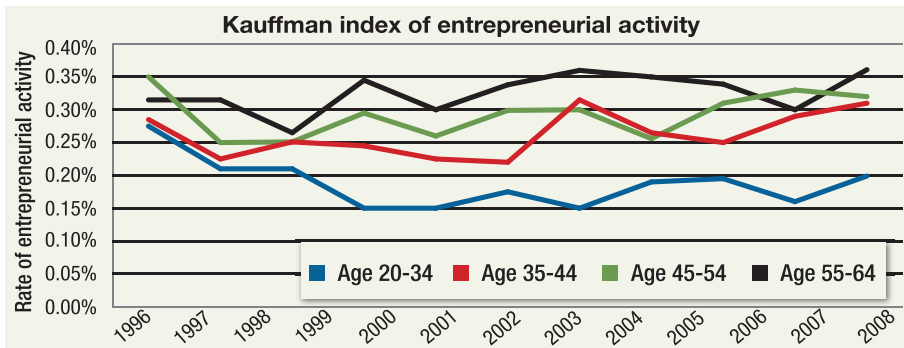

There are strong personal reasons to want control over your care. Do you want to rely on family members for your daily needs? The average stay in a nursing home is two to three years — don't you want to choose the place?

What about a private room? Making new friends is fine, moving in with them, not always a good idea. Even if you are strong enough to stay in your own home, your relatives may not be able to meet your needs. A long-term care policy can pay for caregivers with experience and expertise.

The Internal Revenue Service and Colorado Department of Revenue want you to know that you may deduct long-term care premiums as medical expense and also receive non-taxable payments for your care when you are unable to perform at least two activities of daily living, such as bathing and dressing.

The Colorado Partnership Plan promises to let you exclude an amount of assets equal to the amount paid on your behalf by your insurer from the legal right of recapture by the state whenever you than younger generations.

“It’s the place in life that age has allowed you to get,” she said.

But one of the challenges boomers have that many 20- or 30-year-olds don’t, is a mortgage, kids and other obligations that make an irregular paycheck worrisome. That’s undoubtedly why many people don’t venture out on their own.

And in the recession, many boomers who have already created their own business are revisiting their plan and goals. King said people are making the choice whether to stick it out and continue with their dreams or fold because of the struggles they’re facing.

According to the study, even if the trend changes and the current boomer generation doesn’t keep opening businesses, then there will be thousands of mentors available to coach future generations.

“But a steady increase in life expectancy also means that Americans are not only living longer but also living healthier longer, suggesting that those entrepreneurial 60-year-olds could be 2020’s entrepreneurial 70-year-olds,” the study states.

Sour economy keeping boomers in work force

DENVER —The economy is also a factor in the rise in senior workers and two-income households, said Colorado state demographer Elizabeth Garner.

The percentage of Coloradans age 65 and older in the work force has risen from 15.5 percent to 17 percent last year.

“It’s kind of a double whammy,” Garner said. “One, it’s the economy, but two it’s the beginning edge of the baby boomers.”

Garner said the percentage of seniors working has been steadily increasing since 1998 after declining for the previous 40 years. The state expects the number of older workers to escalate through the next decade, she said.

The same trend is taking place among families, with the percentage of households with both parents working in Colorado rising from 56.9 percent to 58.4 percent in 2008.

BREAK, from 10

might exhaust the policy provisions and need to accept aid from Medicaid. For example, if you were in a private facility for 30 months at today’s average cost of $200 daily, and the policy paid $180,000, then you can keep that amount in your control.

These are valuable incentives worth your careful consideration. Long-term care insurance is not cheap, but the alternatives are more expensive. The writer has had a joint policy for 10 years and the benefits could exceed the total premiums, net after tax deductions, in less than six months of care.

Make your decision carefully, being sure it will be affordable, but act while you are still insurable and avoid the age-related premium increases. Be sure to consult an independent agent familiar with the special provisions offered by competitors, such as inflation protection, discounts for multiple policies, home care allowances, and the term of continuous benefit payments.

Lean on me

“We don't really help anyone die, we help them live better each day, live as richly and fully as possible. That's an honor. And that's what this is all about.”

Michele Ferguson, MD
MEDICAL DIRECTOR

We don't cure anyone at HospiceCare. But with physicians like Dr. Michele Ferguson on our team, we do often heal them. HospiceCare Medical Director with a board certification in Hospice and Palliative Medicine, Dr. Ferguson is committed to providing the very highest caliber care to people on the end-of-life journey. Because she knows that by offering comfort, compassion, respect and choice, we can help those who are dying find richness and meaning in all the days that have yet to be lived.
