GOLFING FOR GOOD

CHARITY TOURNAMENTS AROUND THROUGHOUT REGION

Business Report file photo

By Zac Taylor
news@ncbr.com

The charity golf tournament has become something of a staple ever since its humble beginnings in Britain during the First World War, when renowned English golfer Harry Vardon and teammates traveled around the country to raise money for the war effort on the continent.

Today golf tournaments raise money for everything imaginable, from research to cure all sorts of diseases to funding scholarships for local students. While there is no overall estimate of how much money is generated each year through golf outings, just one example is last year's McKee Masters Golf Tournament at the Mariana Butte Golf Course in Loveland: It attracted 120 golfers and raised $34,000 for the medical center's Stepping Stones Adult Day Program. The related women's event, Birdies on the Green, raised more than $6,000.

Sponsoring a benefit tournament has become a big way for businesses to get their name out and support a good cause. Simply entering a company team in an event sponsored by someone else lets you play a round of golf with customers or potential clients in a relaxed and convivial atmosphere.

Here's a sampling of just a very few of the many, many charity tournaments set for the area in 2011; check with your favorite charity or local golf course to see what other opportunities are available this summer.

HOTT GOLF GEAR

FOR 2011

What the well-equipped golfer will be sporting this year.

By Doug Storum
dstorum@bcbr.com

Editor's note: Listed with each item is the manufacturer's suggested retail price, but we found all items for less after calls to local golf shops and online searches.

DRIVER

TaylorMade R11 Driver

The latest and greatest from one of the top makers of the driver has new technology, like an adjustable sole that can adjust the face angle of the club, as well as the ability to adjust the launch angle. This club promotes up to 100 yards of side-to-side trajectory change and 1,000 RPM backspin change, giving you power and distance. The aerodynamic shape promotes faster club head speed for more distance. It has a white nonglare crown and black clubface. MSRP $399.

HYBRID

Callaway Diablo

A thin crown allowed designers to place the center of gravity low and in line with where most players strike the ball on the face, making it easier to launch the ball high. The standard model has an offset hosel to combat a slice, and the Tour version sets up more neutral. Both have Callaway's variable-thickness face for better energy transfer. MSRP $200.

JUST FOR WOMEN

Power Distance pink golf balls

This golf ball has longer carry and a soft feel and was made specifically for the female player. Nike Power Distance Women's Golf Balls are designed for optimal lift, traveling longer distances off of most swing speeds. They feature two-piece construction and a 320-dimple design for a more aerodynamic shape. The pink color adds flair and visibility to your game. MSRP $15.95.

SHOES

True Linkswear Tour

They weigh just 13 ounces, and when you wear them, your foot sits just 2.5 millimeters above the ground. Ryan

Moore has been sporting these spikeless golf shoes on the PGA Tour since May, but they've only recently been available to the rest of us. In five color combinations; the leather Stealth (shown in brown), is available now. MSRP $159.

PUTTER

Odyssey Backstryke Sabertooth

An interesting new alignment mallet with weighted fangs, aiming channels and a stroke balance shaft. The visible face gives you clear sight for parallel and perpendicular alignment aids, while forward press stabilization delivers proper hand position and creates true roll and stability. If you like sensing the rotation of the putter face in your stroke, the Backstryke is not for you. MSRP $225.

SEGWAY

X2 Golf cart

Segways' x2 Golf cart can speed up play time, give players greater flexibility in maneuvering the course, and allows players to travel together as a foursome or go directly to their own ball. Carrier attachment secures your golf bag and allows for easy dismount and club access while playing. Removes easily for storage and transport. Holder keeps your scorecard, golf balls and tees readily accessible. Top speed is 12.5 mph. First introduced in 2007, the company this year is making a push to sell to golf clubs to replace conventional golf carts. MSRP $6,400.

RANGEFINDER

Bushnell Hybrid

Bushnell has come up with the first laser rangefinder and GPS in one. This device is for the golfer who can't commit to either the accuracy of laser rangefinders or the versatility of GPS technology. The hybrid's laser has Bushnell's dependable pin-seeker technology, and the device is preloaded with more than 16,000 courses in the U.S. and Canada. MSRP $500.

WEDGES

The Bobby Jones Wedge Collection

This set of wedges combines durability with a soft feel. With new USGA regulations on groove geometry, wedge durability is important for maintaining shot trajectory and spin performance. The wear-resistant face insert, made from an aerospace steel alloy often used in industrial bearing assemblies and critical valve components, maintains face friction and groove integrity longer than conventional wedges. It has a classic shape with a black nickel chrome finish. Lofts available in 48, 52, 56, 60 and 64 degrees. MSRP $119 to $139 each.

HICKORY SHAFTS

Louisville Golf's persimmon heads

Get a kick out of using hickory-shafted woods from Louisville Golf. This three-club set includes a driver, spoon and baffle. In modern terms, that's driver, 3-wood and 5-wood. They have solid persimmon heads, authentic hickory wood shafts and genuine leather grips. The company will engrave the shafts with your name on them. www.louisvillegolf.co. $725 for all three.

THE ORIGINAL SOCIAL MEDIA

How to get the most out of your game for business

Pam Swensen

EWGA

Engaging your customers through social media is the latest mantra of every business guru. Yet long before the age of Facebook and Twitter, smart business people were using golf as a valuable way to build customer relationships. Where else can you spend four uninterrupted hours with a client or colleague and the only appropriate use of a smart phone is to measure the distance to the green?

In today's fast-paced world, golf as a business tool is often overlooked or considered a sport for an older generation. Yet smart businessmen and women who want to get ahead should add golf to their career skill repertoire.

Just like building your company's social media strategy, business golf requires planning and focus. Here are some tips to get the most out of playing golf for business.

Know your purpose: Going into a business golf opportunity without identifying a purpose is like going into a business meeting without an agenda — it isn't likely to produce the results you want! Identify what you want to get out of the time together and what your playing partners get as well.

Plan your outing: Based on your business purpose, you should plan your outing the same way you plan a business meeting, a lunch meeting or presentation. Choices and details should be made and arranged in advance to ensure they align with your business purpose. Set expectations up front for all participants, so there are no surprises.

Interaction with others: Focus on your business purpose. You aren't there to shoot your best round of golf ever (even though it would be nice). Check yourself on every hole: Are you focused on your business purpose?

Know golf course etiquette: Your golf skill is secondary. If you know golf course etiquette everyone will enjoy joining you for a game of golf. You should know when to talk and when not to talk, where to stand when others are making a shot, how to take care of the course, where to drive the cart, pace of play, cell phone etiquette (shut it off!), how to tip and how to dress.

Have basic golf skills: Remember you have a day job and the goal here is business. However, a basic game is necessary. Here are some benchmarks: Can you hit the ball at least 100 yards? Do you know the basic techniques for chipping, putting, pitching and sand? Are you 100 percent confident that you know how to get around a golf course in a courteous manner?

Select a course for all abilities: Don't assume that a woman golfer will always play from the forward tees or that men should automatically play the longest yardage possible. Especially for business golf, choose a course with multiple tee boxes (rated for both men and women) and the yardage that makes the game enjoyable for all who are playing.

Viva la difference: In general, men do not talk much business on the golf course. However, women do. They are more prone to multitasking and therefore tend to talk more business while they play. Keep these differences in mind during your on-course conversations.

Break at the forward tee: Men who are accustomed to all-male foursomes occasionally forget to stop at the forward tees for a female player's turn. To avoid this faux pas, try to keep the cart with women players in the front position while at the tee box.

To acquire and hone your golf skills, seek out a golf professional. One resource for golf programs is the PGA of America's website at www.playgol-famerica.com. For females, the Executive Women's Golf Association has over 125 local chapters throughout the United States offering new golfer clinics and numerous other player development programs as well as numerous golf, networking and social activities. When it comes to engaging clients and the chance to build long term relationships, the one-on-one experience of business golf is social media at its best.

Pam Swensen is CEO of the EWGA, headquartered in Palm Beach Gardens, Fla. Since its founding in 1991 as the Executive Women's Golf Association, the EWGA has connected more than 100,000 women to learn, play, and enjoy golf for business and fun.
