Doctors are the biggest reason I'm with Rocky. It's important to me that whatever kind of doctor I need, I have choices. My husband, my kids and I all have different doctors - all covered. And I don't have to ask permission to see the specialist of my choosing. Rocky has lots of doctors - more than eight thousand - throughout Colorado. That means I can always get the care I need when and where I need it. For me, that's the proof. Rocky really is in it for my health. That's my plan and I'm sticking to it.

Sense of Security helps cancer patients pay daily bills

BY LAURIE M. FISHER

Breast cancer patients often find themselves battling for both their physical and financial health. While there have been significant strides to fight the disease, many patients face the additional worry of financial ruin.

Sense of Security, a nonprofit organization based in Broomfield, helps Colorado breast cancer patients by providing financial assistance for up to 12 months to assist in payments for mortgage or rent, transportation costs, child care, utilities, groceries and medical insurance premiums. The organization does not pay for medical costs including co-pays, medication and other out-of-pocket expenses.

“The prognosis for breast cancer is pretty good,” says Nancy Olson, executive director of Sense of Security. “If you can get through the treatment, you have good chance of long survivorship. We don’t want people to have the negative financial effects of breast cancer lasting longer than the physical effects.”

The organization was founded in 2000 by two women who underwent treatment for breast cancer. Two-time breast cancer survivor Vicki Tosher had a friend named Donna Rogers who also was undergoing treatment. Rogers ran out of money because her long-term disability didn’t kick in when she needed it most, Olson explains. Rogers didn’t know how she was going to pay her bills. While friends advised her to sell her home, she resisted since that was one constant in her life that made her feel safe. Although she received assistance from friends and family, the idea of Sense of Security was founded from her predicament.

“While you are undergoing this treatment you should not have to worry about foreclosure, eviction or bankruptcy,” Olson adds. “The focus should be on healing and taking care of yourself.”

Sense of Security has filled a niche to help patients meet basic living expenses, she notes. To date the organization has distributed an average of $350 per month to more than 450 applicants. Typically each patient is helped for about five months. The staff works with patient navigators from oncology offices and hospitals across the state. “We have a wall in our office filled with thank-you cards,” she notes.

Not surprisingly, the need for assistance is greater than the $350,000 annual budget, and requests are growing. Currently, there’s a waiting list for fund distributions. Sense of Security raises funds through two yearly events and support from individuals, corporations and foundations in addition to the Susan Komen Race for the Cure in Denver and Colorado Springs.

“In beginning we had trouble finding people who needed our help,” she recalls. “However, over the last 18 or 24 months the word is out. People do know we exist, and the need is so tremendous.” In fact, she cited a Harvard study which showed half of personal bankruptcies stem from medical problems.

Health-care reforms leading debate in Colorado, U.S.

It's pretty clear health care not only will be one of the leading issues nationally heading into the 2008 presidential race, but also here in Colorado, where legislators are considering health-care reform proposals.

At our Health-Care Heroes Awards in November, luncheon guests listened as Marcy Morrison, Colorado insurance commissioner, predicted the difficulty the state Legislature will face trying to come to terms with five different reform proposals presented by the governor's Blue Ribbon Commission on Health-Care Reform.

Just getting to the five proposals has been an intense amount of work by the commission, and you can examine those results online at www.colorado.gov/2008commision/. "To be honest," Morrison said, "it would be very hard to succeed in doing it all in one year."

No one questions the complexity and expense of reforming health care, particularly with finding the money to bring Colorado's uninsured under a new umbrella of coverage. Colorado is not alone in this, as other states like Oregon grapple with similar reforms. And next to the Iraq war, health care already is one of the hottest debates in the country.

As opinions rage, however, baby boomers continue to age, and demand for health-care services is soaring.

Boulder County's only full service Biomechanical foot orthotic lab

We live in a digital age where MRI's, CT's and Ultrasounds have become standard tools in the medical field. P.T.I. is following suit by implementing digital gait analysis and pressure mapping software.

Four camera gait analysis software allows us to digitally measure and compare angles of the lower extremity. This synchronized frame by frame capability ensures accurate dynamic range of motion measurements.

Digital pressure mapping software measures peak pressures, progression of force, center of gravity and gait symmetry inside the shoe in real time. The software is also used to compare pre vs. post orthotics results and surgical outcomes.

Singer Hazel Miller, hugging her 2-year-old granddaughter Trinity Miller, changed her eating habits, started exercising more and has lost weight to help her manage diabetes.

WHO'S AT RISK?

JONATHAN CASTNER

11% of health-care expenditures go to diabetes, complications

By Lyla D. Hamilton

A routine blood test told renowned Denver-area singer Hazel Miller she had diabetes. Mary Rose, a Boulder massage therapist, discovered she had it only after she went into a potentially fatal coma.

Miller and Rose are among an estimated 357,000 Coloradans now living with diabetes. According to the Colorado Department of Public Health and Environment, a third of those who have the disease do not know it.

Diabetes is a cluster of conditions related to the body's ability to process glucose, the simple sugar produced when the body digests food. Transforming glucose into usable energy requires insulin, a hormone the pancreas normally supplies. If the body doesn't produce enough insulin or resists its action, glucose accumulates in the bloodstream. High levels of blood sugar are a marker of diabetes.

The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services says diabetes is "approaching epidemic proportions." It expects a 165 percent increase in diabetes diagnoses during the first half of this century.

According to the American Diabetes Association, 11 percent of U.S. health-care expenditures already go to diabetes and its complications.

Since diabetes affects every organ in the body, consequences and complications can include blindness, kidney failure, dental and nervous system diseases and amputations of lower extremities.

Colorado sees more than 2,000 deaths annually from diabetes-related causes. According to the U.S. National Institutes of Health, stroke and heart disease account for about 65 percent of the deaths of those with diabetes. People with diabetes are more likely than others to die from pneumonia and the flu.

David Podlecki, an endocrinologist at the Longmont Clinic and medical director of its Diabetes Care Team, urges those at risk for diabetes to act before they experience any of the disease's classic symptoms. "You don't want to wait until you reach that," he stressed.

Type 2 diabetes accounts for up to 95 percent of all cases. Podlecki describes it as “one end-state of insulin resistance,” a condition in which the cells do not use insulin properly, and the pancreas can’t meet the body’s demand for it.

Forty-one million Americans, including about 211,000 people in Colorado, have pre-diabetes, which means their blood glucose levels are above normal but not high enough to be deemed diabetes.

The good news: Insulin resistance, pre-diabetes and type 2 diabetes often respond to changes in diet and activity level.

For healthier eating, the American Diabetic Association recommends that people mentally divide their dinner plate into quadrants. Proteins should occupy about a quarter, while whole grains take up another fourth. Non-starchy vegetables like carrots, cucumbers and lettuce occupy the other half. Nonfat milk plus a small roll or a piece of fruit round out the meal.

Exercise, a recommended 30 minutes per day, helps the body produce insulin. It also promotes weight management, another significant benefit since excess poundage can impair the effectiveness of the insulin the body produces.

Diabetes can change lives, but it doesn't have to limit them.

JONATHAN CASTNER

Miller, for example, has changed her eating habits, adopted an exercise routine and lost weight.

Rose makes it a point to stay active as well. “I exercise for my blood sugar level and for my sanity,” she said.

When exercise and diet alone don’t control blood-sugar levels, numerous medications taken orally are available to treat type 2 diabetes. Some improve the body’s response to insulin. Others increase insulin production or delay the absorption of carbohydrates.

“There’s no easy formula,” Rose stressed. “Diet, exercise and medications affect blood sugar. Changes in weather or temperature, or illness or infection can also affect it. Stress and hormones also affect body chemistry.”

Type 1 diabetes, the other major form of the disease, accounts for only 5 to 10 percent of the cases. It is an autoimmune disorder in which the body destroys the pancreatic cells that produce insulin.

Those with any form of diabetes must monitor and manage their blood-sugar levels. Glucometers require a finger prick and offer periodic at-home readings of blood-sugar levels.

“You always have to pay attention. You never get a day off,” Rose said.

The science of diabetes continues to advance. Newer sensors provide continuous monitoring. Certain cases of type 2 diabetes require insulin, for example, and new “pens” preloaded with the correct dose may provide a cost-effective alternative to the traditional syringes and vials.

Since the prevalence of type 2 diabetes increases with age, the growing population of those over 60 is a factor in the diabetes epidemic.

Type 2 diabetes increasingly is found in younger populations, a trend related to physical inactivity and excessive weight.

Ethnicity also plays a role. Miller, for example, worries about her young granddaughter, whose combined African American and American Indian heritage puts her at particularly high risk for diabetes.

“Awareness is the most important thing, and it has to start at the preschool level,” Miller said. Parents, churches and schools all need to support the message of healthy eating and increased physical activity. She challenges overweight youngsters, telling them to “get up and walk instead of sitting at home watching video games.” If necessary, she says, people should be willing to be the first in their neighborhood to start a program of walking.

Diabetes can change lives, but it doesn’t have to limit them.

“My mother taught me to fight back,” Miller said. “I’m not ready to lie down and die. I’m trying to stay alive and to stay viable — able to work. To do that, I have to keep the disease under control.” MD

Forms of diabetes

Type 1 diabetes, previously called “juvenile diabetes,” is a disorder in which the body’s immune system destroys the insulin-producing cells in the pancreas. According to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, however, “a significant portion of those with type 1 diabetes are diagnosed as adults.”

Type 2 diabetes, was previously termed “adult onset diabetes” because it occurred primarily in those older than 45. Obesity and inactivity have made it increasingly prevalent among children and adolescents as well as adults.

Risk factors

Anyone older than 45 is at risk for type 2 diabetes. Risk generally increases with age. Overweight younger people are also at risk, especially if there is a family history of diabetes. Other risk factors include having diabetes during pregnancy or giving birth to a baby weighing more than nine pounds.

African Americans, American Indians, Hispanics and Asian Americans have a higher incidence of type 2 diabetes than people of Western European descent.

Precursors of diabetes

The National Cholesterol Education Program defines insulin resistance syndrome as the presence of any three of these conditions: high levels of blood glucose after fasting for eight or more hours, excess weight in the abdomen, high blood pressure, low levels of HDL (“good” cholesterol), or high levels of triglycerides, a type of fat found in the blood.

Pre-diabetes is a condition in which blood glucose levels are above normal but not high enough to be deemed diabetes.

Insulin resistance syndrome and pre-diabetes often respond to changes in diet and exercise habits. These behavioral adaptations can delay or even prevent the onset of type 2 diabetes.

Symptoms

The most common complaint leading to a diabetes diagnosis is fatigue, but someone with type 2 diabetes might not exhibit any symptoms.

Symptoms of advanced diabetes are: excessive thirst, increased urination, weight fluctuation, general malaise, blurred vision, frequent infections, sores that heal slowly, tingling or burning sensations in the extremities, or swollen, red or tender gums.

Endocrinologist David Podlecki of the Longmont Clinic urges people to deal promptly with insulin resistance and pre-diabetes rather than waiting until symptoms of diabetes develop.

Patients get health blueprint at NatureMed Clinic

BY BARBARA HEY

There's more to health care than treating disease. Naturopaths Stephen and Kelly Parcell go beyond the scope of medical doctors who take an after-the-fact approach — treating patients when they are already sick. While the Parcels do that as well, they prefer to be proactive, using the latest evidence-based medicine to help patients stay well, ideally long before any symptoms arise.

“Longevity medicine is the aggressive early detection and prevention of disease,” Stephen says. “There are all sorts of diagnostic tests available to the medical consumer, so many it can make your head spin — all types of blood work, thermal imaging and genetic testing.”

The tests yield an all-encompassing picture of current health issues as well as of the maladies a patient may be at risk for in the years ahead. This, he says, is an exciting, but little-known breakthrough in health care.

“Many people have no idea what is available to them,” he says. “We measure everything that relates to early detection of disease. Some is based on scientific plausibility, extrapolated from what we know accelerates the aging process.”

While traditional doctors might, for instance, treat only an excessive level of triglycerides, the Parcels track changes over time. Even if triglycerides — an indicator of heart disease risk — are within normal limits, if there's a pattern of increase, the Parcels would address it as part of preventive care.

The idea, embraced by scores of baby boomers, is to live long, die fast, and in the meantime work diligently to avoid the chronic illnesses that can hamper the quality of life in the middle years and beyond. The tools exist to prevent or reverse many ailments such as heart disease, to lessen the risk of others and to forestall the physiological effects of aging, he says.

But first, the patient needs to know his or her health blueprint, and that is a service the Parcels provide. To determine the agenda, at NatureMed Clinic the initial 90-minute appointment includes a thorough assessment — exam, medical history, relevant lifestyle details (diet, exercise, exposure to pollutants).

Next are lab tests to measure levels of hormones, blood sugar, vitamin and minerals, as well as lipids and cholesterol. Parcell also suggests genetic tests, a one-shot-expense since genes never change, to look at DNA-based predispositions related to cardiovascular health, immunity and vulnerability to toxins.

Certain genes, he says, are linked to hypertension, some influence how well a person withstands oxidative stress (cellular damage that occurs with age).

Parcell urges testing for nutrient deficiencies, which can increase susceptibility to illness. For instance, CoQ10 and vitamin D both have “rock-hard data” supporting their health benefits, but are rarely assessed in routine blood work. CoQ10 promotes heart health, and vitamin D is linked to reduced risk of cancer.

With the results, the Parcels create a plan that prioritizes health concerns for each patient and makes specific recommendations, including supplements, diet and exercise, all tailored to the individual's needs and lifestyle.

In addition to healthy aging, the Parcels also specialize in optimal wellness for athletes, women's health, natural hormone replacement therapy and natural treatments for children's behavioral issues, such as attention deficit hyperactivity disorder.

As naturopaths, the Parcels' training overlaps much of what occurs in traditional medical school. Where the coursework diverges is that naturopaths devote more study to natural medicines (botanicals, homeopathy, Chinese medicine) and nutrition.

Both Parcels did internships with MDs, and bring that breadth of knowledge to their practice, partnering with primary-care physicians and specialists to provide integrative health care for patients

One area in which they've had remarkable results is with patients diagnosed with calcium deposits in the heart and carotid artery stenosis. These patients are put on a prescribed protocol. The result time and again is a complete reversal of these high-risk conditions.

“We are all about results-based medicine,” Stephen says. “I wouldn't have believed it myself, but I've seen the heart scans.”

JONATHAN CASTNER

“Longevity medicine is the aggressive early detection and prevention of disease,” says Stephen Parcell, who with his wife, Kelly, operate NatureMed Clinic & Rejuvenation Center in Boulder. The Parcels, both naturopaths, develop a health blueprint for all patients, prioritizing their health concerns and making recommendations tailored to the individual's needs and lifestyle.

Removing STIGMA of mental illness

Barbara Ryan, executive director of The Mental Health Center of Boulder County Inc., hopes to see the day when stigmas no longer are attached to mental illness, and it is recognized as a biological disorder.

STEVE PETERSON

Some say it's biological disorder that can be treated

By Rebecca Cole

About one in four Americans over 18 suffer from a mental disorder in any given year, according to the National Institute for Mental Health.

That's nearly 60 million people.

Even though it affects a wide swath of the population, the stigma of mental illness remains, said Barbara Ryan, executive director of The Mental Health Center of Boulder County Inc.

"We used to attach a stigma to illnesses like epilepsy," Ryan said. "I hope the day comes when we can stop attaching stigmas to mental illness and recognize it as a biological disorder like diabetes, epilepsy and other physical health diagnoses."

With several incidents of violence on campuses nationwide in the past year, including the shooting at Virginia Tech and stabbing at the University of Colorado, the line between labeling mentally ill people as "dangerous" and maintaining public safety is being put to the test, with some school officials and policymakers advocating greater access to mental-health records and criminal background checks.

"People with severe mental illnesses are no more dangerous than the general population when they're receiving treatment," Ryan said. "They're much more likely to be a danger to themselves than they are to anyone else."

Mental-health professionals recommend careful monitoring as the best way to identify the signs of problematic mental behavior, including delusions, increasing depression, manic behavior or expressions of suicide, Ryan said.

"I hope the day comes when we can stop attaching stigmas to mental illness and recognize it as a biological disorder like diabetes, epilepsy and other physical health diagnoses."

"But clearly, if we feel someone is a risk to themselves or others or gravely disabled, and they can't take care of themselves, then that person would either go to Warner House (a Boulder residential treatment facility) or to the hospital," she said.

Focused treatment and personalized medication regimes are the best way to help patients recover.

"For the people ... at the more severe end of the spectrum, I think it's very difficult for therapy alone to address the issues because the biological component is such a big part of the issue," Ryan said.

Newer medications, called "atypical antipsychotics," used for the most severe mental illnesses such as schizophrenia, correct chemical imbalances by blocking serotonin as well as dopamine and have less acute side effects than previous drugs. These medications help reduce abnormal thinking and improve the social disengagement many people with severe mental illness experience.

The 60 and 80 percent recovery rates from mental illnesses — including schizophrenia, bipolar disorder and major depression — are better than those for traditional physical treatments like angioplasty, Ryan said.

"Part of recovery is not only to be in treatment and to frequently take medications but also to, as people begin to feel better, go back to work, becoming part of the community; having the kind of structure and purpose and meaning in their life that we all want."

Health records, background checks center of debate

In September, a national task force of attorneys general, chaired by Colorado Attorney General John Suthers, released a report on school and campus safety.

The report advocates sharing private mental-health records with government agencies, sparking a debate between legislators and mental-health professionals.

"This report includes valuable assessments and recommendations to help prevent violence in our high schools and colleges," Suthers said in a statement announcing the report's findings.

Some of the key recommendations for state and federal legislators include:

- Remove several significant barriers to effective information sharing for the benefit of public safety.
- Work with the U.S. Department of Justice to ensure criminal background checks contain relevant information to disqualify mentally ill individuals from purchasing or possessing firearms.
- Disturbing behavior must be reported to experts trained in risk assessment.

Barbara Ryan, executive director of The Mental Health Center of Boulder County Inc., said, "Clearly, our responsibility as professionals is to protect the individual and protect the public. But I think if we start making information readily available, particularly in light of the stigma about mental health, people are going to stop seeking treatment."

Background checks

In August, an ex-employee of the University of Colorado, who was referred to the post by Chinook Clubhouse in Boulder, stabbed a freshman on the Boulder campus.

Immediately after the incident CU conducted criminal background checks on five other Chinook-referred employees and placed them on paid leave. But, said Ruth Arnold, director of Chinook Clubhouse, according to the Americans with Disabilities Act you can't single out anyone, for any reason.

"I believe very strongly that a person with a disability should be treated the same as anyone else," Arnold said. "So they (background checks) should be done on everyone."

On Sept. 12, CU revised its employment background check policy. The new policy requires criminal history background checks for all new faculty and staff, promoted or transferred employees and some student hires.

American Cancer Society's new patient services center NONPROFIT PROFILE

The American Cancer Society opened a new patient services center in Boulder to help provide patient health information for our community.

Thanks to the generosity of volunteers and donors, the American Cancer Society was able to cover the larger facility and we will have a greater amount of health care services," said Liz Dinkley, the Cancer Center executive director of the American Cancer Society. "We can help to reduce the financial burden on our patients. It is very meaningful. We encourage you to give us a call at Cancer Society 800.422.6234. We are here to help you get the most out of your services. We are trained volunteers and professionals, including interpreters, translators, and other services with you. Another group that we benefit from is the local food bank. Food Bank programs, by providing food to our patients, ensure and will help reduce their financial burden.

Cancer patients can also make appointments with a trained staff and staff team. We are available to help you and your family with your health care needs.

The cancer also offers the cancer's free and fast service. The cancer's free and fast service is available to help you and your family with your health care needs.

New procedure improves knee replacement surgery

BY KEELY BROWN

Boulder Orthopedics specialist Dr. Lynn Voss recently became the first surgeon in Colorado to perform a remarkable new procedure that provides a greatly improved alternative to traditional knee replacement surgery for patients suffering the pain of osteoarthritis.

The procedure, known as the Journey Deuce system, uses a partial knee-resurfacing implant, sparing the surrounding cartilage and ligaments that would be removed during a total knee replacement.

“The Journey Deuce is a powerful new treatment option,” said Dr. Voss, who performs the surgical procedure at Boulder Community Hospital. “This technique can be a life-changing procedure for a large percentage of knee surgery candidates.”

The Journey Deuce resurfaces the medial and patellofemoral compartments of the knee through the use of a curved metal implant, which moves against a thin plastic-and-metal insert on the shinbone. By spanning a smaller portion of the knee, the Journey Deuce enables surgeons to keep intact the all-important anterior and posterior cruciate ligaments (ACL and PCL) that contribute to the feeling and function of the natural movement of the knee.

The Journey Deuce also makes it unnecessary to remove the surrounding bone and cartilage that help to support these natural movements.

“Unlike a total knee replacement, the ACL remains intact with the Journey Deuce system,” Dr. Voss said. “That means the patient has a better ‘joint sense’ of movement, of what his knee is doing in space. And having the cartilage stay intact also gives the patient more of the feeling of having a natural knee.”

Dr. Voss said this “joint sense” produces better sensory feedback from the surrounding bones and joints, which in turn creates superior balance and mobility.

“With the Journey Deuce procedure, mobility functions increase and risks go down,” he said. “Research has shown that the recovery period is much faster, with a lot less pain.”

Unfortunately, the new procedure isn’t appropriate for every person suffering from osteoarthritis in the knee. Good candidates for the Journey Deuce procedure need to have intact and healthy ACL and PCL ligaments and their osteoarthritis can only affect two of the three compartments comprising their knee.

Jonathan Castner

A new treatment option for knees, the Journey Deuce system, offers an alternative to traditional knee replacement surgery. Boulder Orthopedics specialist Dr. Lynn Voss, above, was the first surgeon in Colorado to perform the new procedure.

However, recent studies show an estimated 70 percent of patients needing knee replacement surgery may qualify for the new treatment.

Another important benefit of the Journey Deuce system is that it can be successfully implanted in knee replacement candidates of all ages — a particular advantage, Dr. Voss said, considering the shift in the age demographic of his patients seeking treatment.

“Not only am I seeing younger patients, but their demands have changed as well,” he said. “They want more from their knee implant than pain relief. They want their active lifestyle restored. They want the most natural and normal motion possible. They want smaller scars and shorter physical therapy after surgery. And, of course, they want as little post-operative pain as possible.”

In the past, surgeons have typically tried to persuade younger patients to put off having a total knee replacement until later in life, primarily because a replacement knee will wear out in 15 or 20 years, necessitating a second surgery — which can further debilitate a patient’s range of motion.

Because the Journey Deuce takes less bone mass from the thighbone and shinbone, younger patients can have the new implant done with the understanding that they might not need a second surgery down the line.

“Because the cartilage will still be in the lateral side, wearing out the knee shouldn’t be a problem,” Dr. Voss said. “This may be the only procedure they’ll ever need to have.”

Older candidates for knee replacement surgery also can benefit from the Journey Deuce procedure. It requires less disruption of soft tissue, as well as less removal of surrounding cartilage, bone and ligaments. As a result, post-operative recovery is not only less painful, but during rehabilitation the patient’s muscles and ligaments don’t need to readjust to a new range of shapes and motions, as is the case with total knee replacement surgery.

While the Journey Deuce procedure won’t completely take the place of knee replacement surgeries, it has already proven to be a desirable alternative for a large percentage of osteoarthritis sufferers of all ages.

“We have people coming in who are specifically asking for this now,” Dr. Voss said. “There are patients who have been putting off their knee replacement surgery, waiting for us to be able to offer this.”

Frequently asked questions about total knee rehabilitation

Physical therapist Radhika Menon of the Boulder Center for Sports Medicine answers the most frequently asked questions about recovering successfully from knee resurfacing or total knee replacement:

1. How soon after my surgery will I need to begin physical therapy?

Rehabilitation can begin the day after surgery. A Continuous Passive Motion machine is started in the hospital and sent home with the patient to maintain range of motion immediately. When you schedule your surgery, ask your doctor if you can schedule your rehabilitation as well.

2. How long before I can have some weight bearing on my knee?

Weight bearing can begin on the first day after surgery. If pain is an issue, it might be advisable to use crutches initially, but the short-term goal is to discard the crutches and to normalize your walking pattern as quickly as possible.

3. What restrictions will I have after surgery and for how long?

Patients should avoid high-impact sports involving running, jumping, twisting and cutting for at least three to four months. Riding a stationary bike, pool exercises and walking are usually recommended in the early weeks.

4. How long will I be off work?

Two to three weeks is the usual recommended time.

5. What will I be doing in therapy?

Physical therapy will involve treatments to assist with pain and reduce swelling, including walking training; range of motion exercises and stretches; strengthening exercises; advice on how to progress appropriately with home exercises.

6. How many weeks will rehabilitation take?

Formal rehabilitation will take at least six weeks, seeing a physical therapist two to three times a week. The length of your formal rehab depends on how hard the patient works to gain strength and improve conditioning.

7. When can I return to normal activities (running, cycling, tennis, etc.)?

If a patient returns to these activities too soon, you risk further injury. Strength, mobility and stability are compromised after an injury and after surgery. A patient can start on a stationary bike within the first week after surgery, but returning to road biking usually takes four to five weeks. In most cases, a patient doesn’t return to high-impact activities. Easy court sports should wait at least four months after surgery.

New scanner technology can assess risk for debilitating osteoporosis

Boulder Community Foothills Hospital has significantly enhanced its ability to diagnose osteoporosis by installing the latest screening technology for that rampant condition.

The hospital's new digital bone densitometry scanner is the state-of-the-art technology for measuring bone strength and the first General Electric digital Lunar IDXA scanner in Colorado.

Osteoporosis is a gradual thinning and weakening of the bones that can lead to bone fractures. More than 25 million Americans have osteoporosis. Nearly 80 percent are women. Osteoporosis results in more than 1 million hip, spine and wrist fractures annually.

The disorder affects nearly one-half of all post-menopausal women, the largest group at high risk for osteoporosis. It usually begins in the perimenopausal years when a woman's ovaries begin to produce less estrogen, and it can rapidly accelerate at the time of menopause.

Men 50 and older are also at risk for developing an osteoporosis-related fracture, but their bone loss occurs more gradually over time.

"Low bone strength is an insidious condition that does not have any symptoms until a patient develops a fracture," explained radiologist Dr. David Oppenheimer. "Fractures can be debilitating and lead to spinal deformity or lifelong disability. Unfortunately, half of all patients who sustain a hip fracture will die within one year."

The new digital densitometer measures bone mineral density, which relates directly to bone strength. The procedure is painless and only takes a few minutes. Patients using the new scanner at Boulder Community Foothills Hospital receive minimal exposure to radiation, about a quarter of the amount in a dental X-ray.

Peter Wayne

Dr. David Oppenheimer and radiologic technologists Natale Phelps and Kristy Rouse, demonstrating a patient's position, will use the new General Electric digital Lunar IDXA scanner at Boulder Community Foothills Hospital. This scanner, the first of its kind in Colorado, measures bone mineral density, which directly relates to bone strength. This improves the diagnosis of osteoporosis.

Schedule a scan!

Individuals can schedule a bone density scan by calling 303-440-2170.

Some key benefits of the new bone densitometry scanner include:

- Precise measurement of bone density in the lower back spine, both hips and the forearm; the most common fracture sites.
- Anatomical evaluation of the upper spine to screen for small fractures in the vertebra.
- Rapid calculation of an individual's fracture risk.
- Accurate monitoring of how a person is responding to various treatments to help strengthen their bones.

Individuals do not need a prescription for this scan and no special preparation is required.

"We do request that a patient refrain from taking a calcium supplement the day of the scan, since it can affect the results for a scan of the lower back spine," said radiologist Dr. Paul King.

"With this type of scan, a person can easily understand the status of their bone density today, and they can take actions now that can help prevent a fracture in their future," Dr. Oppenheimer said.

"There are many easy steps that the average person can take that will prolong your good bone health into the future," Dr. King agreed. "If you wait until you have a fracture to take action, it's too late. Sadly, that is often the case in today's elderly population."

Boulder Community Hospital is committed to keeping Boulder County healthy by offering the latest health-screening technologies at a reasonable price. Along with the new digital bone densitometry scanner, the hospital offers heart attack risk evaluation through its HeartScan calcium scoring on high-speed CT scanners, abdominal aortic aneurysm screening, stroke risk assessment through an ultrasound screening, a CT-based lung cancer screening and, coming in February 2008, digital mammography.

Body, soul therapies offer support for cancer patients fighting disease

BY KEELY BROWN

For cancer patients, survival and quality of life often depend upon a variety of different treatments — treatments that sometimes require traveling from one medical center to another in a search for the most effective clinical and therapeutic care.

With the opening of the new Tebo Family Medical Pavilion in Boulder a few months ago, comprehensive cancer treatment for many patients is now available in a single location. And thanks to the Center for Integrative Care at the Tebo Pavilion, cancer patients now have convenient access to a wide range of complementary therapies in addition to their regular schedule of drug and radiation therapies.

The Integrative Care Center offers a broad range of services that can improve the quality of life for cancer patients -- healing touch and therapeutic touch therapies, Reiki, acupuncture, massage and lymph massage therapies, mindfulness meditation, guided imagery, yoga, music therapy and counseling.

The Integrative Care Center, which is run by Boulder Community Hospital, also has an oncology-trained registered dietician on staff to help patients who have dietary concerns — or who are experiencing difficulty in eating, as is often the case with those suffering from head and neck cancers.

All of these therapies and services are provided by licensed and certified practitioners who have undergone specialty training in caring for oncology patients.

According to Lynne Bentley, director of oncology services at BCH, research has proven that integrating such complementary therapies into a program of traditional medical treatments for cancer can improve the quality of life for patients and their families.

“Cancer patients can be desperate to find a way to live, so we felt it was critically important to make sure we maintained our integrity by providing services that are research-based and have strong evidence for efficacy,” Bentley said. “That’s why we do our programs in tandem with our physicians, and we avoid over-promising and under-delivering. We don’t say we’ll cure your cancer, but we do say we’ll help with your symptoms, such as problems with your fears, anxieties, or pain.

“There’s no guarantee, but studies indicate that when you have these kinds of support therapies for patients, the patients have a higher quality of life.”

In addition to the Integrative Care Center, the Tebo Pavilion also offers a Resource Center designed to provide patients and their families with easy access to information about cancer and its treatment options. The Center offers free online services, as well as a wide range of brochures and other information from the American Cancer Society and Lance Armstrong’s “Live Strong”

Survivorship Program.

“We searched the Internet to identify the best web sites for accurate and understandable information on many types of cancer,” Bentley explained. “The Center is designed for self-service use, so we have these sites clearly organized by type of cancer on our Resource Center computers. We also have trained volunteers who can guide people to the specific information they need.”

The Resource Center is open Monday through Friday, 7 a.m. until 5 p.m. Volunteer guides are available by appointment by calling 720-854-7293.

What really makes the Tebo Pavilion unique, according to Bentley, is the way the physicians, nurses, clinical staff, complementary care staff and volunteers work together to provide each patient with an individualized and comprehensive treatment regimen.

“We are truly in this because of our commitment to helping cancer patients and because we care,” she added. “For the doctors and our staff members, this is not just a job. It’s our life’s work.”

Helping chronic pain sufferers

More options available for physical, psychological suffering

By Keely Brown

Chronic pain can be the most debilitating of all medical conditions — and the most isolating. But sufferers no longer need to feel misunderstood and alone, thanks to the pain management physicians and specialists who are committed to making sure those suffering from pain — and its devastating effects, both physical and psychological — are being taken seriously.

Dr. Mark Wilson, a physician board-certified in anesthesiology and pain management who practices at Exempla Good Samaritan Medical Center and the Rock Creek Kaiser Permanente Center, both in Lafayette, said the most common pain-causing conditions he sees are those related to neuropathic pain syndromes — such as nerve compression in the lower back (commonly called sciatica) and other neuropathies caused by conditions such as diabetes.

For these types of pain syndromes, Wilson said pain management specialists often use an implantable therapy such as a spinal-cord stimulator — an electric-impulse device implanted near the dorsal surface of the spinal cord, which provides sensations that help alter the perception of pain.

Another popular treatment involves the use of an intrathecal pump, a device that delivers concentrated amounts of medication into the spinal cord via a small catheter. Because

PETER WAYNE

Dr. Melody Denham, a board-certified physician in anesthesiology and pain management who practices out of the Boulder Pain Institute, explains the spinal cord's role in the sensation of pain. Physicians use a "ladder" approach to choosing specific drug therapies for pain, she said.

See CHRONIC on 23

this therapy can be extremely expensive it is usually reserved for severe pain sufferers such as cancer patients.

"These devices are expensive — between $15,000 and $20,000 — and require filling every month or two," he said. "And the same is true for spinal-cord stimulators. Given our present health-care situation, you have to think twice before you implant a $20,000 device."

For many patients, injection therapy is a more viable option, using anti-inflammatory drugs to calm inflamed nerves. Some anti-inflammatories, such as steroids, are being used to treat everything from asthma to autoimmune illnesses such as lupus and Crohn's disease. Wilson characterized this as a catchall approach that can be problematic, especially considering the side effects — glaucoma, increased blood pressure, mood swings — associated with steroid use.

And the same may hold true of some of the other decades-old drugs still being used to treat pain.

"Some of these drugs aren't tailor-made to be specific enough for certain areas or conditions," he said. "But right now, we're on the cusp of finding new drugs that are more specific for the kind of problems we're treating."

Dr. Melody Denham, a physician board-certified in anesthesiology and pain management who practices at the Boulder Pain Institute in Boulder, explained that physicians use a "ladder" approach to choosing specific drug therapies for pain.

"We have algorithms," she said. "If the pain is mild, we treat it with Tylenol. At the next level, we go to drugs like Vicodin or Darvocet — or we might look at anticonvulsants or antidepressants." As pain progresses in severity, Denham said doctors may turn to prescribing opiates, such as morphine or Dilaudid.

See CHRONIC on 27

Glial cells may hold key to pain relief

Fifteen years ago when Dr. Linda Watkins started researching reasons why many chronic pain therapies don't work as effectively as they should, she and her team discovered some studies conducted previously had missed the boat.

"The research had been developed to target neurons," said Watkins, who works out of the centers for psychology and neuroscience at the University of Colorado in Boulder. "But we wanted to target glial cells, which are in the brain and spinal cord and outnumber neurons."

According to Watkins, glial cells block the opiates used to treat chronic pain.

"We've discovered that glial cells don't like methadone or oxycodone or morphine, so they respond by keeping those drugs from functioning properly," she said.

"Glial cells are like a Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. Until they're activated, they're good — but when they're activated, they become evil creatures and spread out substances that make the neurons go wild. But if you block glial cells, you allow opiates to work better and block pain."

The trick, she said, is to calm down the glial cells so they'll work in tandem with, rather than against, pain-relieving drugs. And research has found that an existing interleukin therapy, which has been in use in Japan for allergies and stroke victims, may hold the key.

Working with Avogen, a drug company in Alameda, Calif., scientists have developed a pill form of this interleukin therapy, which has undergone phase two clinical trials in Australia and phase one trials in the U.S.

Thanks to a heightened awareness of the importance of glial cell research — as well as several grants from the American Pain Society — this crucial research will continue, even after the drug reaches the market, Watkins said.

"It was pretty lonely doing this work 15 years ago, but now a lot of laboratories and good research teams are working on glial cell studies."

Working is an important part of recovery, said Ruth Arnold, director of Boulder-based Chinook Clubhouse. "It's a step along the way to getting going again, to building up stamina; to gain those basic skills about being out in the world."

Chinook Clubhouse, a social rehabilitation program for adults with a history of mental illness, provides a supportive environment for people to reenter the community. The Clubhouse also helps members find part-time jobs through its placement and coaching services, working with both employers and employees to find an optimal balance.

"We offer people a lot of opportunities," Arnold said. "They can do as much or as little as they want. They can come in when they need to get inspiration or motivation to get out there and fight the fight."

The Boulder Mental Health Center has several community-focused programs designed to help people stay on the road to recovery.

PACE, or Partnership for Active County Engagement, is a program that is successfully keeping people out of jail and in treatment, Ryan said. Now used as a model throughout the state, the PACE program was started in 2000 and brings together probation officers, mental-health providers and substance-abuse counselors to work together in the best interests of the patient.

Another program, started in December 2006 by Colorado Chief Justice Roxanne Bailin, is the integrated treatment court. Modeled after the drug court, the program intervenes with mentally ill people who come in frequent contact with the criminal justice system, often for substance abuse.

"The judge becomes a part of the team," Ryan said, "a person that's invested in that patient's success, as are all of the treatment providers." MD

PETER WAYNE

“If I can educate my patients and establish a relationship where they begin to trust me, then these integrative, complementary treatments may become more acceptable to them.”

Dr. Melody Denham

board-certified physician
anesthesiology and pain management,
Boulder Pain Institute

But commonly used opiates and narcotics such as morphine have their own problems. Side effects can include itchiness, constipation and nausea; increased tolerance levels in some patients can decrease effectiveness.

Because of these concerns, physicians in recent years have begun prescribing antidepressants and anticonvulsants in the fight against chronic pain.

“One might be surprised how many patients are being treated with antidepressants now,” Denham said. “It’s becoming very mainstream, and there’s no stigma attached to them anymore.”

It’s a therapy that makes sense, she added, for many reasons.

“When people suffer from chronic pain day in and day out, it impacts significantly on their mood and causes depression,” Denham said. “And, as an added bonus, these antidepressants have pain-relieving properties.”

According to Denham, many of the older antidepressants such as Elavil have proven successful, as have newer ones such as Wellbutrin and Cymbalta, which have proven effective in treating diabetes-related neuropathies. These medications are typically given at much lower doses for pain than they ordinarily would for treatment of depression.

Physicians have begun to recognize the effectiveness of anticonvulsant drugs originally developed for the treatment of conditions such as epilepsy. Anticonvulsants Neurontin and the newer Lyrica have proven to be effective in the treatment of neuropathic pain resulting from conditions such as multiple sclerosis, diabetes and autoimmune disorders.

The wide range of options available for pain sufferers indicates patients who complain of chronic pain are being listened to with more seriousness than before.

“Pain is a vital sign that is no longer being ignored,” Denham said. “If a patient keeps coming in saying they have pain and it impairs their ability, it needs to be addressed. We don’t want to dole out drugs unnecessarily, but we also don’t want patients to suffer.”

But patients do continue to suffer — both physically and psychologically — from chronic pain. According to clinical nurse Bonnie Wilensky, a pain management specialist who works with the Pain Management Program at Boulder Community Hospital, many patients no longer feel they can trust traditional therapies — or even the medical community as a whole.

“By the time they come to us, many of them have been in pain for years — and they’ve been let down and even abused by the health-care system,” she said.

The Pain Management Program provides an integrative approach that embraces treatment options ranging from drug therapies to psychological and dietary counseling, biofeedback, acupuncture and physical, occupational and massage therapies.

However, some of these complementary therapies — such as acupuncture — may require some time before their peak effectiveness is reached, Wilensky said.

“Acupuncture is a therapy that people need to be patient with,” she said. “It’s not a quick fix — and we Americans like quick fixes.”

Because of the anxiety and depression often associated with pain, Wilensky recommends psychological counseling for her patients — that is, if they’re willing to try it.

“But if they’re resistant to counseling, it’s not going to work,” she cautioned. “With any therapeutic recommendation, if a patient is not ready or willing to receive it, it doesn’t matter how great I think it is, because it’s not going to work against that mindset.”

On the flip side, some patients are willing to embrace anything that precludes the implementation of drug therapy — although drug therapy may in fact be the best treatment for them. Because of this, Wilensky said one important aspect of her job is to help patients overcome pre-existing prejudices toward viable treatment options.

“It’s all about trust,” she said. “If I can educate my patients and establish a relationship where they begin to trust me, then these integrative, complementary treatments may become more acceptable to them.” MD

If you sell directly to business... advertise to business decision-makers.

The first rule of selling:

Make sure you're talking to the decision-maker. It's no different with advertising. If your message is not getting to the decision-maker you're wasting your money. That's our entire focus: We target Boulder and Broomfield counties' decision-makers. CEOs, company presidents, vice-presidents, leading attorneys and business owners read the Boulder County Business Report because it delivers regional business intelligence quickly, in an easy-to-read format. Business information they can't find anywhere else. Ask a Boulder County Business Report reader.

They'll tell you it's true.

We're all about business.
We're all about Boulder
& Broomfield Counties.
We're your market for success.

Dr. Barry Platnick

EXEMPLA GOOD SAMARITAN AND DR. BARRY PLATNICK DISCUSS THE COMMON ADULT PROBLEM OF

VARICOSE VEINS

What are varicose veins?

Varicose veins are veins that have become dilated, dysfunctional and twisted. They may be large or small. The term commonly refers to the veins on the leg, although varicose veins occur elsewhere. Varicose veins are common in the superficial veins of the legs, which are subject to high pressure when standing. Besides cosmetic problems, varicose veins are often painful, especially when standing or walking.

Who has this problem?

72% of women and 42% of men have varicose veins by age 60. For some, it can be extremely painful.

What are some of the risk factors for varicose veins?

- Multiple pregnancies
- Obesity
- Family history
- Standing profession

Are there symptoms associated with varicose veins?

Yes, symptoms may include pain, swollen limbs, leg heaviness and fatigue, restless legs, skin changes and skin ulcers.

What are the treatment options for varicose veins?

There are many options for treating varicose veins. Non-surgical options include elevation of the legs and compression stockings, in addition to sclerotherapy. Sclerotherapy is relatively painless and can treat small to medium veins. Non-surgical options, however, do not provide complete or long-term relief of symptoms and pain. Some surgical options include:

- Phlebectomy
- VNU[®] Closure
- Vein Stripping

Phlebectomy is removal of diseased veins through a series of small incisions and use of specialized hooks to treat visible varicose veins. This option can treat large veins. It requires an incision and patients may experience mild pain. Vein stripping involves an outpatient groin surgery that strips the diseased vein. Recovery time for this option can be many days to weeks. The VNU[®] Closure procedure is a minimally-invasive alternative to vein stripping. It is performed on an outpatient basis and provides good relief of symptoms and has an excellent cosmetic outcome with minimal to no scarring, bruising or swelling.

Will insurance pay for these procedures?

In many cases, insurance will cover symptomatic vein issues.

Not getting the sleep you need?

Find out about our comprehensive sleep services.

Call the Sleep Disorders Center to have your sleep problem assessed by one of our specialists. We're located in the BCH Mapleton Center, 311 Mapleton Avenue in Boulder. Our phone number is 303-440-2095.

A Threat to Your Health

Sleep problems such as chronic insomnia can lead to depression, the inability to concentrate and higher risk for accidental injury. Sleep apnea, which affects more than 23 million Americans, can increase the risk of heart attack, high blood pressure and cardiovascular disease.

Treatment is Available

Boulder Community Hospital offers the first Sleep Clinic in Boulder County. Our sleep specialists — board certified physicians and technologists — use state-of-the-art methods to diagnose and treat a wide range of sleep disorders, including insomnia, sleep apnea, restless leg syndrome and more.

At the clinic, you'll have a consultation with a sleep specialist and receive a comprehensive evaluation, including treatment recommendations for your specific symptoms. On-going treatment is available as needed.

We have the resources to help you get the good night's rest you deserve.
