Health care permeates local, national discussion

Any topic that finds its way from the dinner table to the water cooler is likely to work its way onto the national agenda. When that topic becomes the butt of jokes on late-night television, adding to razor-thin votes in Congress and repeated references in presidential debates, we truly have a topic that has permeated all aspects of American society.

Health-care reform, of course, stands atop the domestic American agenda. Late-night talk-show host Jay Leno once joked, "I have been thinking about the health-care problem and how to pay for health care. If you took all the money the Republicans have spent trying to stop health care and all the money Democrats have spent trying to get health care, we could afford health care."

That's not too far off from the truth.

Health care affects everyone. Those who can't afford health insurance tend to neglect their own health or their families' health, one day finding their way to hospital emergency rooms. That costs everyone, as hospitals will somehow pass on those costs to taxpayers or those people who do have health insurance (in the form of higher rates).

Employers are affected by the health-care discussion, with rapidly escalating costs to provide insurance for their employees. The health-care industry itself is undergoing wrenching change. In the Boulder Valley, and elsewhere around the country, hospitals are expanding, adding services and vying to survive in a new world.

PUBLISHER'S NOTEBOOK

Hospitals are forging alliances with one another or battling it out. They're acquiring small practices or specialty clinics, offering the administrative support and security of a large system to physicians no longer able to afford independence.

These times of change nationally will be felt locally for years to come. That's why a publication such as Boulder Valley MD is so important. This directory, produced by the Boulder County Business Report, seeks to identify every medical facility — and physician — within the Boulder Valley, including all of Boulder and Broomfield counties.

Clinics have sold. Facilities have closed. New entrants have come into the market. A reference tool for consumers and health-care practitioners becomes an essential tool for tracking those changes and answering an important question: Where do I go for health-care services?

I'd like to thank chief researcher Mariah Gant for her hard work researching this publication, and to the entire staff of the Business Report for helping pull this magazine together.

As the 2012 election nears its end, no matter who emerges as victor, health-care reform will continue atop the national agenda through 2013 and beyond. And the Boulder County Business Report, along with Boulder Valley MD, will be there to write about it.

WANT A TUCK, CHUCK?

Desire for youthful look, competitive edge lures more men to plastic surgery

Dr. Eve Bluestein preps a client for a brow-lift by drawing guide lines on his face at Boulder Surgical Arts in Louisville. Nationally, men made up 9 percent of all plastic-surgery patients in 2011, compared with 5 percent 10 years ago.

BOULDER — The number of men wanting to look younger is on the rise. As they age, they want to look as good as they can.

Some local plastic surgeons have seen as much as a 20 percent increase in male patients annually in the last 10 years.

Nationally, men made up 9 percent of all plastic-surgery patients in 2011, compared with 5 percent 10 years ago, according to the American Society for Aesthetic Plastic Surgery, a national trade group.

“Men are living longer and healthier, so there’s that attitude of, ‘why not invest in my appearance?’ ” said Peter Schmid, a plastic surgeon and owner of the Institute of Aesthetic Plastic and Reconstructive Surgery in Longmont. "In many cases, there's encouragement from a girlfriend or spouse, and men are open to looking younger."

Schmid said about 25 percent of his plastic-surgery practice is men.

From wrinkle-erasing Botulinum toxin, or Botox, (a non-surgical procedure) and liposuction, to eyelid lifts and jaw sculpting, male patients specifically want less "down time" when they have a cosmetic procedure done, Schmid said.

BURROWS

Many procedures take less time these days and leave less bruising and swelling, especially Botox and filler injections, said Claude Burrow, a Boulder plastic surgeon. Eyelid-lift surgery also is common at Burrow's practice, he said.

"You want friends to say, 'Were you on vacation? You look terrific,'" Burrow said. "Less is more for men. ... That's what gray hair and experience give you."

Machines used in cosmetic surgery have become "kinder and gentler" and patients are back to work in two to three days after surgical procedures, said Winfield Hartley, who practices at Boulder Plastic Surgery

LLC. Office-based procedures last 45 minutes there, and patients get back to normal life "pretty immediately," Hartley said.

"You can have surgery on a Thursday and be back to work on Monday," he said. "It's not a big, 'ask'."

Schmid is marketing specifically to the growing male market, pointing out that men also are getting a variety of "medi-spa" non-

BOULDER – Skin-care client Marc Tanenbaum gets some sort of procedure done at Susan Melching Inc. about once every three months.

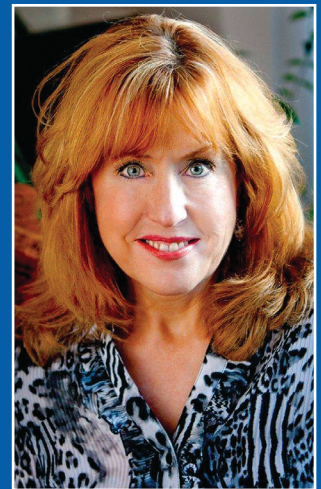

Tanenbaum, 69, a physician at the Stuart Street Preventive Health Care Center in Longmont, attributes his youthful appearance to going to aesthetician Susan Melching for the past 25 to 30 years.

"I've kept myself up, physically. I like looking good and looking young," Tanenbaum said. "Part of it is, as a physician, if someone looks really old, patients think he's going to die or retire."

Tanenbaum is one of a growing number of male patients going for skin-care treatments and cosmetic-surgery procedures these days. He compares the acceptance of men having skin-care treatments done these days to the movement of men to hairstylists from barbers a few decades ago.

Collagen in a person's skin starts sagging in both men and women as they get older, Tanenbaum said. Botulinum toxin — or Botox, as it's commonly called — help make patients' faces look more youthful.

In his own practice, Tanenbaum focuses on preventive medicine and on testing patients for conditions such as heart disease, hypertension and diabetes.

SOUVICNIER FINALLY DECIDED TO TRY TO CUT ANY FOOD OUT OF HER DIET THAT CONTAINED SUGAR — even fruit and its natural sugar. Her body responded with withdrawal symptoms similar to ones an alcoholic would experience. She lost eight pounds in three days.

Nutrition advocates combat disease through prevention

BY BETH POTTER

bpotter@bcbr.com

BOULDER — With doctors nationally estimating that 75 percent of all diseases are related to diet and exercise, it's no surprise that they recommend healthy lifestyles — lots of fruits and vegetables and moderate exercise.

Locally, several doctors and nutritionists are focused specifically on wellness through nutrition.

Boulderite Shira Souvignier went to her doctor, Jill Carnahan, for help in figuring out a way to deal with acid reflux, or gastroesophageal reflux disease, in which a patient commonly gets heartburn and other symptoms.

Souvignier said that because her father for years had been taking Prilosec, a drug to combat acid reflux, she was worried that she might be susceptible to the disease as well as she got older.

Carnahan did a blood test work-up for Souvignier that did not indicate anything about acid reflux. What the blood tests found is that Souvignier had a high level of candida in her body, which — among other effects — causes yeast infections in women.

Candida feeds off of sugar, so Carnahan recommended that Souvignier cut sugar from her diet — a prospect at which the 5-foot-8, 120-pound patient balked. Souvignier said she already was following a restrictive no-meat diet related to dealing with a variety of other wellness issues, including getting rid of the asthma symptoms of her childhood.

Souvignier finally decided to try to cut any food out of her diet that contained sugar — even fruit and its natural sugar. Her body responded with withdrawal symptoms similar to ones an alcoholic would experience, Souvignier said. She lost eight pounds in three days.

“Pretty much all I could eat was vegetables. It was very difficult,” Souvignier said. “I felt sick and had flu-like symptoms. The cravings were overwhelming.”

About five months into the diet, Souvignier has added small bits of fruit back into what she eats as well as a few foods made of grain and some dairy. She said she became vegan (no meat or dairy) 38 years ago and saw her asthma symptoms disappear overnight, but trusted Carnahan enough to return some dairy into her diet and has suffered no ill effects.

Eat right for health

JONATHAN CASTNER

Dr. Jill Carnahan, a physician at Flatiron Functional Medicine in Boulder, estimates that probably 40 percent to 50 percent of all people in the United States suffering from some sort of disease could benefit from a more healthy diet. Carnahan refers to the “Mediterranean diet” — one that is virtually meat and vegetables and a little bit of dairy — as one that will help most people.

Carnahan says she focuses on “functional medicine,” or how to find the underlying chemical imbalances in the body, rather than just treating illness. She practices at Flatiron Functional Medicine with Dr. Robert Roundtree.

“I’m trained conventionally as an M.D., but I have a passion for nutrition and wellness,” Carnahan said. “How do we treat disease, but prevent it from happening? I’m your personal detective in health.”

Many patients may complain that they’re feeling chronically tired or not feeling well, Carnahan said. In response, she tells them that people in their 20s and 30s often can get away with not eating properly, but later in life bad habits start to catch up.

“Our Standard American Diet is SAD for short. We’re so far from where we should be eating, healthwise,” Carnahan said. “You might say you only eat fast food twice a week, but you probably should never touch it.”

Carnahan also tests many patients for deficiencies in minerals such as magnesium and zinc. She weighs treatment options, saying that she thinks carefully about what she prescribes in terms of natural supplements and vitamins just as she would a traditional medication.

For example, Carnahan said she may prescribe a particular herb for stress and anxiety, sleepiness and general fatigue. Aptogenic herbs — those that have unique properties, such as Ashwagandha, ginseng and Holy Basil, among others — can be used to treat conditions such as anxiety, she said.

“It’s maintaining your own physiology rather than suppressing a symptom,” Carnahan said. “I use all of the tools. Instead of just drugs and surgery, I can use nutrition and supplements and lifestyle changes for treating the patient.”

Carnahan estimates that probably 40 percent to 50 percent of all people in the United States suffering from some sort of disease could benefit from a more healthy diet. Carnahan refers to the “Mediterranean diet” — one that is virtually meat and vegetables and a little bit of dairy — as one that will help most people.

“If it’s in a box or a package or has a label, get rid of it,” Carnahan said. “It’s going back to things your grandmother would recognize as food.”

More tricky can be conditions such as high blood pressure or heart disease, Carnahan said, which show inflammation of the heart, low-grade infection and stress from poor diet and lack of exercise.

Many patients already have done exercise before they come to her, Carnahan said, adding that better diet and exercise together often can help.

“People seeking me out are ready for a change,” she said. “I see a complex crowd. Diet is huge, it’s the foundation, but if they need more, I can give that to them.”

Carnahan was a vegetarian for 15 years but felt that it was hard to get adequate protein in her diet. She now tells patients that it’s fine to eat beef, fish, chicken and wild game. Lots of vegetables are good, she says, as are “good oils,” nuts, seeds and fruit for dessert. She advocates eliminating refined carbohydrates, sugars and all processed foods.

Dr. Roy Steinbock, a holistic pediatrician at Mindful Pediatrics PC in Boulder, works much the same way as Carnahan, but with children. Steinbock believes that everyone lives under chronic stress, which is one reason why some children get allergies or chronic illnesses.

While each child is different, often children with asthma or eczema can benefit greatly from changes to what they eat, Steinbock said.

“With kids, you’re not getting enough of a good thing or too much of a bad thing,” Steinbock said. “I’m looking for a cause and treating deficiencies — all of those things at one time.”

Medications also have a place in Steinbock’s practice, but only after careful consideration, he said.

“Many kids are on medications that are used sometimes inappropriately and sometimes overly aggressively, (but) medications certainly have a place,” Steinbock said.

Marc Tanenbaum at Stuart Street Preventative Health Care Center in Longmont says he uses a specialized blood test to predict if a patient will get diabetes and other diseases five to 10 years before they happen.

Tanenbaum preaches the same diet-and-exercise mantra to his patients to stay healthy as do Steinbock and Carnahan.

Nutritionists such as Megan Forbes, owner of Forbes Nutritional Consulting in Boulder, tout the value of foods containing nitric oxide for athletes or anyone looking to be fit. Foods such as beet juice have higher levels of nitric oxide, she said

 I really started taking more a whole-foods approach and that was huge. I spend a lot more time to prepare my own food, and I feel so much better for it. I really started taking more a whole-foods approach and that was huge. I spend a lot more time to prepare my own food, and I feel so much better for it.

competitive college runner

Forbes often recommends various supplements to her clients to help them enhance their athletic performances. She also recommends healthy eating, just like her counterparts.

Former competitive college runner Elizabeth Carey has been taking Forbes' advice and said she is feeling much better.

Carey said she generally is eating more vegetables and fruit as well as beans, seeds and nuts, following advice from Forbes. Instead of having a Zone nutrition bar as a snack, for example, she might have hummus and vegetables. A cereal bar for breakfast is replaced by fruit with nut butter that she grinds herself.

“I really started taking more a whole-foods approach and that was huge,” Carey said. “I spend a lot more time to prepare my own food, and I feel so much better for it.”

With more than a third of Americans classified as obese, everyone from first lady Michelle Obama to television news anchor Katie Couric is advocating exercise to maintain a healthy weight.

That's great, said Dr. Eudene Harry, author of “Live Younger in 8 Simple Steps,” but the benefits of exercise go far beyond fitting into those skinny jeans. For one thing, she said, it will give you younger looking, more blemish-free skin.

“The increase in circulation and perspiration that occurs with exercise delivers more nutrients to your skin while allowing impurities and waste to be removed,” said Harry. “The result? A healthier complexion.”

Harry, medical director for the Oasis Wellness and Rejuvenation Center in Orlando, Florida, adds four more hidden benefits of a good workout:

- Natural “feel-good” chemicals: Exercise releases endorphins, the brain chemicals that boost your mood and make you feel happy, relieve stress and enhance your self-esteem and self-confidence. Exercise also has been shown to increase neurotransmitters, such as serotonin and dopamine, which gives us a natural high and allows us to sleep better.

- Constipation prevention: Exercise increases the contractions of the wall of the intestine, helping to move things along through the intestinal tract more easily, and decreasing the time it takes to pass through the large intestine. Wait an hour or two after eating before exerting yourself; exercising too soon after a meal can divert blood flow away from the gut and toward the muscles, weakening peristaltic contractions and slowing down the digestion process.

- Preventing brittle bones: Walking, jogging, dancing, weight training and yoga are all weight-bearing exercises that help strengthen bones. Swimming and bicycling are considered nonweight-bearing exercises. During weight-bearing exercises, bones adapt to the impact of the weight and the pull of muscles by building more bone cells, increasing strength and density and decreasing the risk of fractures, osteopenia and osteoporosis.

- Enhanced immunity: Physical exertion increases the rate at which antibodies flow through the blood stream, resulting in better immunity against sickness. The increased temperature generated during moderate exercise makes it difficult for certain infectious organisms to survive.

Don't overdo your exercise, Harry said, or you won't see all of these benefits.

“Check with a physician who can advise you on the right activities and intensity level for your individual needs,” she said. “For all the benefits of exercise, there are down sides if you go at it too vigorously for your physical condition. For instance, you can actually increase stress hormones, which can make you more vulnerable to illness, rather than building your immunity.”

Living with diabetes

Changing habits key to avoiding blood-sugar spikes

BY BETH POTTER

bpotter@bcbr.com

BOULDER — Mary Patzer, 67, started to lose a lot of weight in June, and she wasn't feeling well.

Patzer's husband, Helmut, 67, was at Boulder Community Hospital dealing with cancer, and she thought maybe she was taking off the pounds by walking back and forth so much to visit him.

But Patzer said she was having trouble with her vision, too, and she was thirsty all the time. When Patzer visited her doctor, Jill Horner, to find out what was wrong, a blood test showed she had Type II diabetes, also known as adult-onset diabetes. Horner practices at the Gunbarrel Medical Center clinic, which is affiliated with Boulder Community Hospital.

Since Patzer hates the needles a patient uses to inject the insulin he or she needs to combat the chronic disease, she agreed to try whatever other treatment Horner might suggest. Horner prescribed Metformin — two pills per day.

Horner also sent her patient to Grace Mysak, a nurse and a diabetes educator who works with the physician clinics affiliated with Boulder Community Hospital. Mysak taught Patzer how to “count carbohydrates” — basically helping her identify how much bread, pasta, potatoes and sweets make her blood sugar spike to dangerously high levels. Mysak teaches nutrition classes that include the information for any patient referred to her by a clinic owned by Boulder Community Hospital.

As a result of Mysak's teaching, Horner said she went “cold turkey” in changing her diet from one filled with cookies and desserts to one that includes salmon three nights per week and lots of vegetables. She has lost 42 pounds in about five months. She said her husband got out of the hospital after an eight-week stay, although he has to go back for surgery in November.

“I'm not going to say I haven't cheated. It's tough,” Patzer said. “But when I found out I had diabetes — I hate needles with a passion — I got so scared that I vowed I would do everything I could to avoid taking insulin. I really follow that diet that Grace (Mysak) gave me.”

At subsequent checkups, Patzer said she found out that she may be able to be more lenient with her diet by June if she is able to lose a little more weight between now and then. In the meantime, she is focusing on being healthy. Type II diabetes is a chronic disease that must be watched throughout a person's life once he or she is diagnosed with it, doctors say.

“The doctor told me she honestly believes if I'm watching what

Teamed up for treatment

Battle against depression unites behavioral,
primary-care doctors

BY BETH POTTER

BOULDER — When John Shokett moved to Boulder County five years ago, he was struggling with depression and desperate to see a therapist.

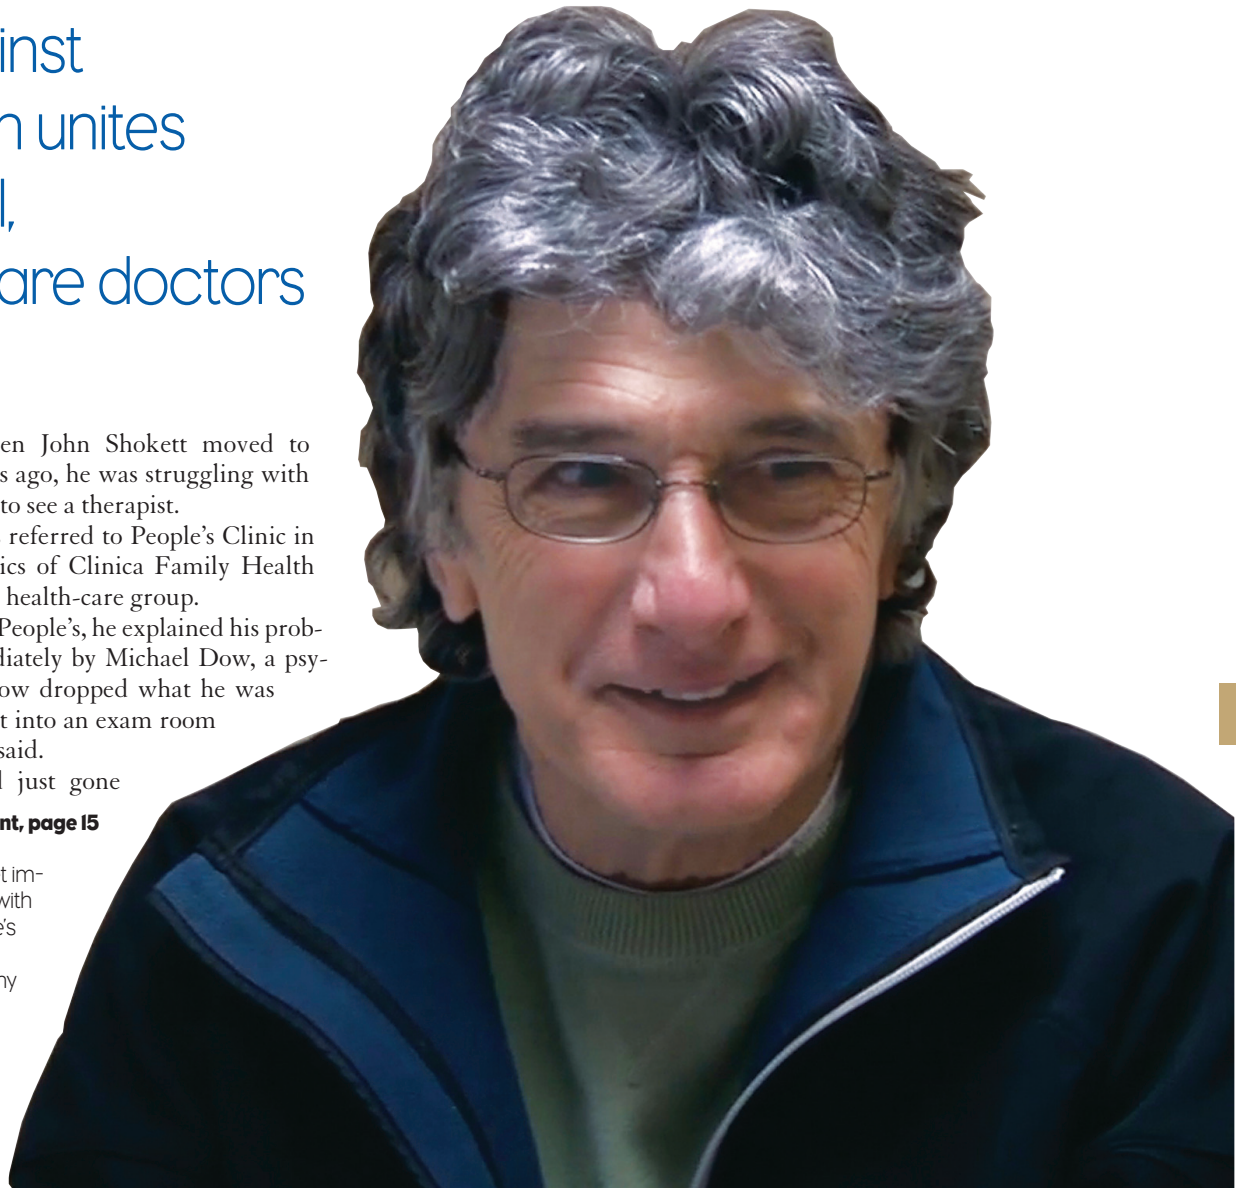

Shokett, now 68, was referred to People's Clinic in Boulder, one of five clinics of Clinica Family Health Services, a local nonprofit health-care group.

When Shokett got to People's, he explained his problem and was seen immediately by Michael Dow, a psychologist at the clinic. Dow dropped what he was doing and invited Shokett into an exam room for a quick chat, Shokett said.

Shokett said he had just gone

John Shokett was able to get immediate and effective help with depression issues at People's Clinic in Boulder, where an "integrative health" philosophy means behavioral-health specialists are part of a team of providers that includes doctors, nurses, physician assistants and others.

It was like I was his (Dow's) only patient in the world, which really helped me. I was incredibly depressed.

through a divorce and had been living on his brother's couch in Las Vegas before moving to Boulder. He likens the depression he felt at that time to a wound that felt physically painful. Since then, Shokett said, he has had a therapy visit once every two weeks and now feels much better.

"It was like I was his (Dow's) only patient in the world, which really helped me," Shokett said. "I was incredibly depressed."

Dow said he was able to meet with Shokett right away, because Clinica focuses on integrative health — meaning that behavioral-health specialists are part of a team of health providers that includes doctors, nurses, physician assistants and others.

No statistics are available on how many behavioral-health providers have joined primary-care doctors across the nation, but the number is on the rise, Dow said. Clinica made the administrative change about six years ago.

With an estimated 30 percent of all patient visits to doctors related in some way to issues of depression, anxiety or stress, Dow said, it makes sense to have behavioral-health providers be part of the equation.

Primary-care doctors treat 80 percent to 90 percent of pa-

SUPERIOR — If you feel depressed, the symptoms of depression may be masking another illness, doctors say.

For example, if you feel tired all of the time, you may have anemia, meaning your body is low on iron, said Cary Crasmick, a doctor at Northwest Family Medicine in Superior, a clinic owned by Boulder Community Hospital.

Another condition that causes fatigue is hypothyroidism, which can be corrected by taking a thyroid supplement, Crasmick said.

Depression can be an indicator of Parkinson's disease, come about as part of the hormonal changes related to pregnancy and be experienced by heart attack patients, Crasmick said.

Medicines such as beta-blockers — used to treat heart disease — can have depression as a side effect, Crasmick said. Tranquilizers and pain medications also can give patients problems, he said.

Clinica's integrative-medicine approach to mental health comes from Pete Leibig, president and chief executive of the organization. When it comes to health, the mind and body are connected and can't be treated separately, Leibig has said. So if a patient comes in complaining of aches and pains, Leibig and others in the health-care field believe it's often depression-related.

tients complaining of depression in the United States, other studies show, Dow said, adding that patients don't usually go to mental-health specialists when they're referred by doctors.

Sleep problems, lower back pain and "chronic" pain can be signals of depression, said Susan Wortman, development director for Clinica Family Services, which also includes clinics in Federal Heights, Thornton and north Denver.

About 30 percent of people who complain from dizziness have an anxiety disorder, Dow said, adding that irritable bowel syndrome can be a signal of depression as well.

Patients who complain of one of the possible symptoms are given a questionnaire to fill out, Wortman said. From there, the patients are referred to behavioral-health specialists affiliated with their doctors, she said.

As a result, more than one-third of all patients to Clinica's Boulder and Lafayette clinics also received some sort of mental health treatment in 2011, according to statistics compiled by Anthony Porcaro at Clinica.

Treatments were for alcohol and other substance-related disorders, mood disorders other than depression, attention deficit and other disruptive behavior disorders, other mental health disorders and anxiety disorders, including post-traumatic stress syndrome, Porcaro said.

Clinica's integrative-medicine approach to mental health comes from Pete Leibig, president and chief executive of the organization. When it comes to health, the mind and body are connected and can't be treated separately, Leibig has said. So if a patient comes in complaining of aches and pains, Leibig and others in the health-care field believe it's often depression-related.

In fact, people suffering from depression-, anxiety- and stress-related illnesses are believed to be the largest number of patients in the health-care system, both locally and nationally.

An estimated 60,000 people in Boulder and Broomfield counties have some sort of mental-health issue, according to Mental Health Partners, the nonprofit center serving the two counties with locations in Boulder, Broomfield and Longmont.

At Clinica, Dow said the integrative-medicine approach expands to fit any health issue. For example, he said, a patient complaining of lower back pain might also get a stress-management plan and an exercise plan from a behavioral specialist.

A person with diabetes, hypertension or obesity also may get an exercise plan, he said. So depression screening is a huge part of his work, but five or six other health behaviors also keep him busy, Dow said.

"One piece of it is medication, but a big part of it is changing behavior," Dow said. "We talk about what is the obstacle to you doing an exercise plan or changing your diet and give you strategies for addressing that."

Depression facts

What it is: Severe despondency and dejection, accompanied by feelings of hopelessness and inadequacy.

Symptoms: A significant change from the individual's normal level of functioning, causing significant distress or impairment in the person's life and his or her ability to function. Depression symptoms can happen suddenly or more gradually, with severity of symptoms ranging from mild to severe.

A major depressive episode: Defined as having five or more of the following symptoms for the same two-week period. At least one of the five required symptoms must be either depressed mood or loss of interest.

- Depressed mood most of the day, nearly every day;
- Diminished interest or pleasure in all or almost all activities most of the day, nearly every day;
- Significant change in appetite (increase or decrease) or weight (loss or gain);
- Insomnia nearly every day;
- Observable agitation (feeling restless or fidgety) or retardation (feeling slowed down) nearly every day;
- Loss of energy or fatigue nearly every day;
- Feelings of worthlessness, or excessive or inappropriate guilt, nearly every day;
- Diminished ability to think or concentrate, or indecisiveness, nearly every day;
- Recurrent thoughts of death, recurrent suicidal ideation without a specific plan, or a suicide attempt or a specific plan for committing suicide.

surgical procedures done, too, including facials, microdermabrasion on their facial skin and complexion-related chemical peels, among other things. Schmid's website includes a sculpted, tanned male torso.

"What we see on television and the Internet on male attractiveness makes it more acceptable," Schmid said. "For a square appearance to the jaw or a chiseled appearance, there's a strong influence from the media."

Liposuction — rebranded as "liposculpture" — is increasingly popular, Schmid said. That includes the sculpted "six-pack" appearance to the abdomen of a man who is of normal weight or slightly overweight. Popular male fitness magazines and health magazines often show weight-lifter bodies on their covers, giving more men a wish for a strong and powerful physique, Schmid said. "This really enriches their self-confidence."

As the baby boomer population continues to age, Burrow says he is seeing more male patients as well.

Eyelid procedures also reduce bags under a person's eyes, Burrow said, brightening a man's look and making him seem less tired.

"If they're still in the workforce, they're competing with the 40-year-olds," Burrow said. "They want to look younger and better, and they don't feel their age."

Male patients seem to want to consume cosmetic services differently than women do, local doctors say.

For instance, while potential female patients often bring a friend, relative or spouse along for support, Burrow said, men do more research online and come in by themselves — ready to sign on the dotted line.

"The men really know what they want done," he said. "They've made up their minds when they come in."

It also seems to be more acceptable these days for men — especially younger men — to address things they don't like about their appearance than it was 10 years ago, said Eve Bluestein, a doctor and owner at Boulder Surgical Arts in Louisville, owned by Bridging Your Health Inc. The number of male patients pursuing cosmetic jawline surgery has risen in recent years, for example, she said.

And both male and female patients are less likely to try to hide cosmetic surgery procedures they have done as it has gotten more accepted in society, she said.

"There's less societal inhibition or negative influence toward cosmetic surgery," Bluestein said. "(Patients) feel secure in themselves."

Nonsurgical skin care is offered by the Susan Melching Inc. skin-care practice in Boulder, which offers preventive and corrective care to young professional men mainly in their 30s and 40s, according to owner Susan Melching. She said she has male clients into their 80s as well.

Popular nonsurgical procedures include chemical peels, microdermabrasion and laser hair removal, Melching said.

"Guys who are in their 30s and 40s are just trying to look the best they can," Melching said. "Older guys are trying to stay competitive."

I'm eating, within a year, I will not have to be on medication," Patzer said. "They will always call me a diabetic, but there's a strong possibility that I won't have to take the pills."

As a measure of how far Patzer has come in just a few months in managing the disease, she used to have to check her blood sugar level in the morning before she ate anything and two hours after every meal. Now she is down to checking her level just once a day. Her diet can include seven eggs per week. She also can have a snack — an ice cream bar or any other snack that has five carbohydrates or fewer — once per day.

"I've learned to live without a cookie, so that might have been my favorite food that I gave up," Patzer said. "I feel like someday I'll be able to have a piece of cake or a cookie, but I'm not going to dwell on it."

For a recent dinner, the Patzers made lasagna, and Mary Patzer ate a two-inch piece. The couple eats salads, as well as the salmon and other fish, which Patzer didn't really pay attention to in her previous life. If she makes mashed potatoes and gravy

 We changed our whole eating pattern. I'm feeling better. I don't feel like I'm deprived. I want to tell people it's not the end of the world. I thought it was, but it's not.

for her husband, she'll double up on eating other veggies instead of the potatoes that night. The meat portions in the diet are "the size of a deck of cards," she said.

"We changed our whole eating pattern. I'm feeling better. I don't feel like I'm deprived," Patzer said. "I want to tell people it's not the end of the world. I thought it was, but it's not."

Type II diabetes is hereditary, but not everybody with the disease in their families will get it, Mysak said. To avoid getting diabetes, people should exercise and be at a normal weight, she said. In classes, Mysak teaches students how to read the label on a food jar and how to manage blood sugar levels without medication by counting carbohydrates (as measured on the labels).

Patients who see blood-sugar spikes can do some basic detective work to figure out what's happening, Mysak said. She recommends that patients go for a walk or drink some extra water if they see a blood-sugar spike.

HOSPICECARE OF BOULDER AND BROOMFIELD COUNTIES

A Legacy of Caring, Compassion, and Choice

Founded in 1976 as Colorado's first and our community's only non-profit hospice, HospiceCare has a long history of providing expert, compassionate care to those who are terminally ill and their families. Much has changed over the years, but our commitment to those who are facing end-of-life issues has never wavered. Because we have never lost sight of the reason we're here: to care for the community that founded, shapes, and supports us.

PAIN MANAGEMENT

Acupuncture and herbal medicine are safe, effective methods used for thousands of years to treat pain and illness and restore health and wellbeing

Acupuncture is also effective in treating post-op pain, injuries, back and neck pain, headaches, gynecological conditions, allergies, stress, anxiety, insomnia, colds and flu, and more

FERTILITY, PRENATAL & POSTPARTUM CARE, AND PEDIATRICS

Whether you are trying to start a family, are pregnant, or already have children, acupuncture can help

Acupuncture treats male and female fertility issues, and greatly increases the success rate of In Vitro Fertilization

Once you become pregnant, acupuncture provides a safe, gentle, and effective method of maintaining the health of mom and baby

It can ease the discomforts of pregnancy, along with assisting in labor, delivery, and the postpartum period.
