Past quarter century sees rise of foundations

BY KEN AMUNDSON

kamundson@bizwest.com

In the past few years, as natural disasters such as floods and, recently, medical and economic health emergencies have hit the region, nonprofit organizations have put millions of dollars into play to help those most impacted.

As recently as this spring, foundations have stepped forward to help with COVID-19 relief. The Community Foundation for Northern Colorado, for example, created a COVID-19 Response Fund to supplement the work of nonprofit organizations on the front lines of working with those affected. And it also participated in the creation of a large business relief revolving loan fund that enabled businesses to stay afloat during times of shutdown and reopening.

Those efforts were not always possible in the region. Indeed, the past 25 years have seen the rise of foundations on a scale not imagined a quarter century ago. Now, foundational support — whether community foundations, foundations created by philanthropists or foundations that are nonprofit extensions of for-profit corporations — have become an expected partner when disaster strikes or when problems exceed the ability of a single community to solve.

Indeed, foundations have reached the point of being able to ask “can we make a difference, a true impact.”

In April, as business and government leaders contemplated the creation of a fund to aid shut-down businesses, Ray Caraway, then the CEO of the Community Foundation of Northern Colorado, said this:

“The key is the impact. Is there a chance that you’d raise enough to have a substantial impact? If the amount raised is too small, you either sprinkle it around without impact, or you’re in a position of picking winners and losers. Will there be enough resources in it to put a dent in an enormous problem?”

The foundation, along with the Bohemian Foundation and then cities, towns, banks and other businesses raised $5 million for a loan fund.

So what spawned this rise of foundations?

The answer may be multidimensional. Federal tax policy would be a factor. Financial planning that helped channel the prosperity of individuals would be another factor. Pressure placed on the wealthy — often by the wealthy themselves — has resulted in the transfer of personal wealth to charitable purposes often in the form of foundations.

In Northern Colorado, foundational growth likely got a boost from another foundation.

The Boettcher Foundation, which was created in 1937 using the wealth of businessman Charles Boettcher, issued a challenge to the communities of Northern Colorado, according to research provided by Curtis Esquibel, director of communications for Boettcher. In 1993, it offered $500,000 each to Fort Collins, Greeley, Loveland and Longmont if they would match that with $750,000 of new endowment funds in order to create community foundations.

And they did.

Fort Collins already had a community foundation that had been created in 1975 to fund the construction of the Lincoln Center. Loveland, Greeley and Longmont got their foundations underway. Loveland later merged its foundation with Fort Collins to create the Community Foundation of Northern Colorado. Other communities in the county also participated in that organization.

From those beginnings, the community foundations have grown to the point that they can have a significant impact on problems of major scale in their communities.

“Weld Community Foundation has carved out a special place in the community through so many diverse connections. In awarding grants and support to area nonprofits, it has had the privilege of getting to know a vast majority of the nonprofit organizations that are diligently working in the region. In working with government and infrastructure, the foundation has come alongside community movers and shakers, and in setting up funds with donors, it’s gotten to know visionaries who want their charitable gifts well-stewarded with strategic impact,” the Weld foundation said on its website.

The Community Foundation of Northern Colorado has about $132.5 million in assets. The Weld Community Foundation has $32.7 million. The Longmont Community Foundation has $18.9 million. The Community Foundation Serving Boulder County, which is separate from the Longmont foundation, has $70.3 million in assets.

Meanwhile, other foundations have been created, perhaps most notably the Bohemian Foundation, created in 2001 by philanthropist Pat Stryker.

The Bohemian Foundation, which among other pursuits has a focus on supporting music in order to build community, had $18.9 million in assets in the most recent report available on GuideStar.

Ray Caraway, former CEO of the Community Foundation of Northern Colorado

Foundation (McKee Wellness Foundation) had $5.6 million in assets and the Longmont United Hospital Foundation had $5.7 million, according to GuideStar.

Caraway, in his valedictory, called upon the region to create "flagship nonprofits" large enough to tackle huge problems.

"My hope is that we will see the emergence of "flagship nonprofits" — perhaps as the result of mergers — with the ability to champion collaborative efforts around major issues impacting the environment, health and human services, education, and arts and culture," Caraway said.

"With all its imperfections, the nonprofit sector continues to be an irreplaceable part of the social infrastructure that holds our nation together. Donors, board members, and nonprofit executives have the power to maintain this tradition and a moral imperative to do so," he concluded.

Hach Center hears about method to plan for a future NoCo

BY KEN AMUNDSON

kamundson@bizwest.com

Northern Colorado has the elements it needs to have a bright future. It just needs to pull them all together in a regional visioning process, according to an expert on the topic.

Robert Grow, recently retired CEO of Envision Utah, on Wednesday addressed a group of people convened by the Hach Center for Regional Engagement, a division of the Community Foundation of Northern Colorado. He participated in an interview with BizWest Thursday morning.

“Northern Colorado has quality of life, it’s a beautiful area, it has a long history but also is a young, growing area,” he said. “It has a strong economic base and a strong educational base with your colleges. You have sufficient water if you’re careful with it; you can meet the new ozone standards. A regional visioning effort would bring all these things together. It would bring momentum and bring civic will to move faster and to leave a greater legacy for the future of your children,” he told BizWest.

Grow’s appearance at a virtual conference convened by the Hach Center was meant to support the center’s work in bringing residents of Larimer and Weld counties together to jointly solve problems and plan for what the future could be for the region. Envision Utah is an organization formed to help Utah grapple with issues related to growth, specifically water resources, transportation, air quality, economic development and diversity.

The Hach Center was formed a year ago with an endowment from Bruce and Muriel Hach.

“Most people have come to understand that the problems we’re trying to solve, many of them are regional scale. We have to try to solve problems at the right scale, at the scale of the problem,” Grow said.

The legal entities that became Colorado and Utah were created for a different reason than solving problems that might affect regions differently.

“Today’s problems — an ozone exceedance area [for example], you have to solve with everyone who might be a contributor. That’s a different but natural “boundary,” he said.

“People have a natural affinity to solve problems correctly. They do it in their own lives. They look at the problem and figure out what region it affects,” he said.

The Envision Utah model, copied in numerous areas around the globe, was created in 1997 to deal with issues on the Wasatch Front, the population corridor that butts up against the Wasatch Mountain Range and includes Salt Lake City. Envision Utah created a vision for the region — “one that focused on the public’s choice of its future,” he said.

The vision comes after public input and takes into account the values of citizens, which helps to create consensus.

Then comes scenarios, which are possible outcomes of action or inaction, followed by numerous strategies.

“This is time intensive, resource intensive. It is not for the faint of heart. It takes real commitment to listen to others,” he said.

GROW

“Regionalism isn’t about finding the song ‘Kum Bah Yah’; it’s about learning to come together to solve problems. Once people see it and feel it, they want more of it,” Grow said.

Participants will encounter issues bringing people into the process. Some want quicker action than the process can provide.

Using an analogy of a flywheel, Grow said flywheels spin at different speeds, and “engaging is getting your flywheel to spin at the same speed as others. Businesses have a fast-spinning flywheel, so you have to have a part of your process that spins at the same speed as theirs.”

He said it typically takes 12 to 18 months to create a vision, from which a few goals and multiple strategies come. If it takes longer than that, participants will fall away. Implementing strategies will take longer.

“One of the reasons you do regional visioning is to assure that what most people want is not overridden by louder, shriller voices. There are always groups on both ends of the spectrum that are dug in,” he said.

“Usually, you can find where 75 to 80% of the people want to go.”

He said regional differences and jealousies can be overcome. “You’re not trying to make [everyone] the same; diversity is the rule, not the exception. Each area has its own character and that continues.”

Grow said the Hach Center could be the vehicle that drives regional visioning. “It’s a neutral facility, it is a convener with stature and respect, and it already is calling people together to share ideas.”

The pandemic caused nonprofit fundraisers to come to a screeching halt, but the needs continued and escalated. Community Food Share of Boulder County found alternative ways to gather food.

Pandemic slaps down nonprofit fundraising

BY KEN AMUNDSON

kamundson@bizwest.com

Sudden onset of the COVID-19 pandemic threw nonprofit organizations dependent upon event fundraising into turmoil.

The Larimer Leadership Breakfast — the annual Boy Scout fundraiser in Fort Collins — went off as planned on March 12 with attendees wondering whether they had made a wise decision to attend. The tables were full and the program inspiring. After that, almost no in-person events transpired.

Surely, this wouldn't last long, many businesses and nonprofit organizations speculated at the time. Nonprofits delayed their events, but didn't cancel.

As the pandemic wore on, long-time events — even the iconic Greeley Stampede and Cheyenne Frontier Days — were cancelled for the year.

Nonprofits dependent upon money raised at events entered panic mode. Even the third-party events by Rotary, Kiwanis, Optimists and others were put on hold, and the donations that might have been earmarked for a nonprofit vanished.

Nonprofits scrambled for alternatives.

Crossroads Safehouse in Fort Collins quickly learned that the need for its services would spike, while its financial resources went into the tank.

"We're open 365 days a year, 24 hours a day," said Pam Jones, executive director of the agency. "Our mission goes on regardless of the pandemic."

"When the pandemic started, we became quiet and were not sure what we would do next," she said. "We had to focus inward on the shelter side of the operation. As people were forced inside, they faced more domestic violence."

Crisis calls jumped 42% through September. Yet people worried about coming to a shelter because of the illness. Jobless stress along with the disease itself all contributed to a buildup of negative energy around the home.

The agency is well aware of the lethality index, which says that a woman who is threatened with a gun by her partner is 20 times more likely to be murdered. "We saw six such cases a year ago but are seeing almost six a week now," Jones said.

Crossroads embarked on a series of "couch concerts" in the spring in which entertainers performed online and people were encouraged to donate. The agency, which draws about 45% of its funding from federal, state and local grants, continued its operations. It received a PPP loan through the federal CARES Act.

It's biggest fundraiser, the Prohibition Party traditionally held in October, moved online this year and, to some surprise, the event netted about $30,000, the same as the year prior. "Gross revenues were down but our largest sponsors came forward for us again, and we didn't have the venue and food costs," she said.

"We have to be prepared for what is coming," Jones said. While she expects that nonprofits facing similar challenges will need to scale back, Crossroads is trying to maintain its budget because increases in clientele are expected. Eighty percent of the budget is staff, and most of them work in the shelter.

"Any size gift makes a huge difference to the people we serve," she said, noting that the philanthropic spirit is alive in Northern Colorado and people give what they can.

Other nonprofits also have gone virtual where they can. "Boulder is a pioneer in the virtual space," said Chelsea Carver, chief development officer for Mile High United Way, the agency that now serves not only metro Denver but also Boulder and Broomfield counties.

United Way has relied upon that innovation to help it through these times, although collecting donations has been made more difficult.

The traditional United Way approach of contacting employees of regional businesses to seek contributions and pledges slowed during the pandemic as many employees worked from home and gathering for meetings at businesses was not advised.

Premier Members Credit Union, whose CEO Carlos Pacheco sits on the Mile High board, moved its annual campaign to Zoom.

Xcel Energy, which traditionally had a chili cookoff, instead conducted a virtual event.

Demand for services paid for from United Way dollars either directly or through nonprofits has climbed, Carver said. Mile High runs the free 211 crisis line available to people seeking help with social needs. The line fielded 300 calls per day before the pandemic and is now responding to 2,100 calls per day.

"We'll be announcing soon [before this story is published, she said] that our building will be an overflow warming shelter this winter. That's the first time our building has been used for that."

Jeannine Truswell, CEO of the United Way of Weld County, said her agency has suffered dramatically from the loss of events and inability to directly campaign at businesses.

"Many companies are so overwhelmed with the pandemic that they don't have time to run the campaigns," she said. Hospitals are preoccupied with their core mission of treating patients, many of them coronavirus patients, and aren't able to do even email campaigns.

"We do an amazing campaign at JBS [the meat packer in Greeley]; we used to go in once a week and meet with new employees. We can't do that now," she said. In the past, JBS employees accounted for about $100,000 in contributions to the United Way.

State Farm, which recently announced that it is closing its Greeley office, accounted for $150,000 in the past and is now about $10,000, she said.

Truswell said United Way and the Community Foundation of Weld County have worked together on a COVID relief campaign. But she noted that in 2013, the joint campaign to aid victims of the regional flood raised $2 million, while the COVID campaign raised $330,000.

"This is a different kind of disaster," she said, noting that the widespread, community-wide nature of the disease is affecting donors as well as victims.

"On the flip side, our United Way has gotten multiple grants to help nonprofits and has received CARES Act funding from local governments" to help with the direct services that the United Way provides.

The annual auction and dinner in the Spring was cancelled, "but sponsors said they did not want their money returned," she said. An online auction raised some but not as much as previous in-person auctions have raised.

"The board sometimes asks what keeps me up at night, and I'm worried that [if the pandemic continues] we'll have to make drastic reductions in operations."

"I keep a close eye on what's happening in the world and the news about the vaccine — and I know the general populace won't be vaccinated until April. If this were to go on a year or two, we'd have to start with a white piece of paper and start over," she said.

Community Food Share in Boulder County didn't have to start over, but it did have to find new ways to stock its food pantry.

Julia McGee, director of communications for the food bank, said massive numbers of unemployed community members caused food demand to spike. "We saw real generous community support at the beginning, but that has waned," she said.

"Recovery is going to outlast the virus itself," she said.

The agency stopped doing food drives at the beginning of the pandemic because of concern for safety. Instead of food, it is asking for cash, which it can make go further. "Every $1 results in three full meals," she said.

It is running virtual food drives and has used technology to create a "self-serve" food drive opportunity. Individuals or groups can set up a food drive on the food bank's website, set a goal, create a link and send that link to people in their network.

Finding new ways of doing things have also been in the offing for the United Way of Larimer County.

"We felt fortunate that we'd been using mobile fundraising platforms even before the pandemic," said Allison Hines, senior vice president of resource development for the agency. United Way of Larimer subscribes to a service called Mobile Cause, which has elements such as "text to give," virtual events and platforms to run mini campaigns around a theme.

Its annual event in June was all virtual, with the United Way using matching dollars from some donors to incentivize others to give.

She said the agency is creating unique pages for businesses to use in their annual United Way drives built around cutest pet contests or Halloween costume contests, with participants voting with their dollars.

Hines said disaster fundraising done in collaboration with the Community Foundation of Northern Colorado — for both pandemic relief and the forest fires in the county — has resulted in a sense of urgency, but disaster fundraising has also impacted the standard collection of donations. Disaster contributions, $1.27 million for the pandemic and $700,000 for fires, are earmarked and can't be used for the traditional United Way programming and support of nonprofits.

"COVID has brought to light problems in the community that were already there," she said in reference to increased demand for domestic violence services or food pantry services. "We're fortunate that our economy is better than a lot of places. They're [donors] stepping up. They're maintaining," Hines said.

She said the United Way's largest business donor, The Group Inc., has continued in that position because real estate sales have remained strong. Another large donor, Nutrien Ag Solutions Inc., is still doing well and has maintained its support.

She said the agency, which operates on a fiscal year of July 1 through June 30, budgeted down 15% for the current year. "If you back out the disaster fundraising, we're coming in about 5% to 10% less" than what was collected a year ago.

"Larimer County is a very generous community, and we're fortunate to live and work here," Hines said.

The Mile High United Way's Carver echoed that sentiment and said that nonprofits around the country are hopeful as the year comes to a close that donations will come forward.

"The end of the year is so important for nonprofits. It's the Super Bowl, if you will. It probably won't be a great year for anyone, but hopefully basic needs will be met," she said.

"Once we have a vaccine, then let's hope the togetherness and grace that people have shown during this period will continue," Carver said.

Cattle Baron's Ball herds event through pandemic

BY KEN AMUNDSON

kamundson@bizwest.com

GREELEY — Fearing that a gap year in the history of the Northern Colorado Cattle Baron's Ball might spell future disaster for the long-time American Cancer Society fundraiser spurred its annual chairpeople and their board to forge ahead this year. Although it wasn't the same.

"Planning for this event started in October [2019], and we were well on the way to an in-person event for September [2020]," said event co-chairman Gene Haffner. Together with his wife Julie Johnson Haffner, they were on track to hold an event the third Saturday of September that traditionally draws 850 people to a sold-out tent on private property.

When the pandemic hit, "we had the discussion about whether to cancel, but decided that cancer doesn't stop. We wanted to retain a presence for the event in people's minds," Haffner said.

"Before we made the decision, people would ask us, 'why would you do this,' and others would say, 'let's do something,'" Johnson Haffner said. "We wanted to retain our footprint in Northern Colorado," she said, but noted, "there wasn't a playbook for us."

"It was a risk," Gene Haffner said. "Most important to us was to come up with something unique and something that engaged people," he said. The at-home parties, the auction and other elements "made people feel they were a part of it."

"The pieces were similar to the live tent event, so people recognized the familiar," Johnson Haffner said.

This year's event became "The Cattle Baron's Ball at Home 2020," the couple said. Sponsor packages were sold, an auction was planned and instead of the large gathering of people, individuals and businesses were asked to consider hosting safer parties at their homes.

A 45-minute video program was prepared using production technology made available to organizations similar to the Cattle Barons. The video was seamlessly intertwined with live presentations, which the couple said

"Most important to us was to come up with something unique and something that engaged people."

Johnson Haffner, event co-chairman was key to the success.

The traditional auction contained both virtual and live elements. An online auction opened to the public 10 days prior to the Sept. 19 event, and premier auction items were put before public bidders the day before the event.

All the private parties were asked to be conducted between 6 p.m. and 8 p.m., and at 8 p.m. the program began. The program included video testimonials of physicians and patients about the importance of the American Cancer Society. As would be traditional at an in-person event, musical performances were included in the program. The live auction was included in the program as well.

The American Cancer Society considers the Northern Colorado Cattle Barons Ball to be one of its elite galas; it raises about $1 million annually. Because of the pandemic, event organizers set the goal at $500,000. As of mid-November, $460,000 had been raised, the Haffners said. Social media is being used since the event and through the end of the year to reach the goal, they said.

"We were very fortunate that the Weld Trust was the premier sponsor of the event, and it contributed $100,000," Haffner said.

"We're encouraging other nonprofits to move forward. The generosity of communities, of businesses and individuals always seem to be there when there's a need," he said.

Information about the Cattle Barons Ball can be found on the event website, cbbnoco.com, and the video presentation is available on Facebook, <https://www.facebook.com/cattlebaronsballcolorado>

YOU CAN SUPPORT THE 23,000 VETERANS IN YOUR COMMUNITY.

MAKE AN IMPACT

The Blue Star Fund supports our veterans by partnering with service organizations to collectively provide for those in our communities who have raised their hand to serve.

$100

One visit to a mental health provider for a veteran suffering from PTSD

$20 per month

Rental application fee for five veterans to help eliminate homelessness

$350

Monthly fitness membership for two veterans, which can reduce stress and build community

$50 per month

Monthly visit to a physical therapist or chiropractor for four veterans suffering from back and joint pain

$1,000

Scholarships & educational support for certifications, trade skills, job training, etc. for one veteran

In 2020, the McKee Wellness Foundation has distributed more than $70,000 through the Blue Star Fund to local veterans in Northern Colorado. Last year, due to the generosity of matching donors, the total support amount was $97,000, and we hope to reach that again this year. These funds transform the health, wellness, and lives of veterans in our community. As we continue to impact local veterans in 2021, we ask for your support.

Thank you for giving me my son back. I haven't seen him smile since before his time in service. The funds provided by McKee Wellness Foundation gave him the physical outlet and fitness community he needed to get back on track with a life worth living.

A man with a beard and short brown hair, wearing a blue and white striped button-down shirt, is sitting at a desk and typing on a laptop. He is looking towards the camera with a slight smile. In the background, two other people are working at desks in a modern office environment with large windows and wooden chairs.
